"Gibes and Scribes" is the title of a special publication gotten out by the students of the department of journalism at the University of Oregon on the occasion of the state conference of editors held in Eugene last Friday and Saturday. It was printed in green ink, not in recognition of the dominant trait of the average editor but possibly through association with the central idea of the University paper which is called the Emerald.

The title of the publication may have sprung from kindly sentiment on the part of the students, seeking to relieve the seriousness of the regular session with a few jokes, for surely no assemblage of quill pushers or typewriter pounders ever undertook a more serious and solemn topic than this—"How to get Rich." The students extracted some jubilation in gibing the scribes and the latter more than enjoyed the gibing, bringing as it did a cheerful ending to a memorable day.

"Twenty four Hours in Eugene" the mediator might take as the caption of this little ramble into the realms of associated bugs for arrival in and departure from that town of buoyant and belligerent boosters was timed almost to the identical minute on Friday and Saturday of last week. Co-incidentally it may be remarked that the sessions opened and closed in a most accommodating way during the same period of time.

When we arrived the convention was gallantly awaiting the coming of Mrs. Hemenway of Cottage Grove, matron of the association, who was the only lady from out of town to attend the business sessions. With her presence assured, Chairman Ingalls of the Corvallis Gazette-Times ran his fingers through his youthful locks, readjusted his glasses and called the assemblage to order.

Without further ado an attack was launched on the army of General Poor Management and Major Slack Business Methods. Lloyd Riches of Oregon City led the engagement. The only things small about Riches are his mustache and his stature. He bristles with ginger and perspires statistics and in a short time he had several hides on the fence, which just a few moments previously promised several seasons more of durable service for their original owners.

Fred A. Wolfren of the Bend Bulletin, who had been a captain of infantry in the late unpleasantness, here fittingly took up the battle. Mr. Wolfren asserts he has already dislodged the enemy from his familiar haunts in Bend and when he gets through with him, promises to have him in the open where the slaughter will be something terrific.

S. C. Morton of the St. Helen's Mist made the sensation of the afternoon when he described how he, a lumber-jack, had taken hold of the Mist and acquired riches and glory in a short time. He was not at all shy about divulging the receipt for success, intimating that it could be duplicated by anyone with the proper talents, and curiously enough, did not stress at all the fact that as a ship building center St. Helens was hardly to be compared to the average interior town in Oregon from the standpoint of newspaper or business conditions.

A number of others were induced to butt in on the program. Prof. Thatcher who himself resembles an artist's model for a magazine poster, and who directs the student mind through the mazes of advertising at the university, gave some pertinent pointers on the subject matter of advertising. Prof. Thatcher believes "agricultural implement" is not a definite enough name for a spade and it is a poor way to toot one's horn by playing a ukulele.

Mr. Mason of the Klamath Falls News interjected a few pertinent remarks when the opportunity presented itself as did also Mr. Jenkins of the Eugene Register.

Legislator B. F. Jones was present and was invited to make a few remarks. Mr. Jones affects the mannerisms of the jumping jack school of oratory but his natural eloquence found a proper theme in the Roosevelt highway and he pointed out the needs and advantages of this thoroughfare in a most convincing manner.

There being a few unoccupied moments at the close of the session the editors were taken for an auto tour of the city and surrounding country. The itinerary of the particular party of which the Herald man was one, included a trip along one of the forks of the Willamette, through a pioneer pass to Springfield and back to the summit of Skinner's butte from which a fine view of the city and surrounding country is obtained.

At night the editors were banquetted by the Eugene chamber of commerce. Here, at the conclusion of the meal, Association President Ingalls got a chance to spring a few of the jokes he had been saving for the occasion ever since the time he came from Kansas. Keen, alert and quick witted, Ingalls made a good impression.

E. E. Brodie of Oregon City told of the National Editorial Association which is to hold its session this year on wheels, going and coming via the Canadian Rockies and taking three separate sessions: at Victoria B. C., at Seattle and at Portland. They are to take a trip to Crater Lake which is the farthest south in their trip.

President Campbell of the university, who had had a separate story for each introduction, then called on E. C. Piper of the Oregonian, who though he hadn't expected to be called on had prepared a few things to say when he was unexpectedly called on. This included several good stories.

Colin V. Dymont deeply interested the banquetters with a description of the peculiar mission he found in France that of transmitting messages from dead soldiers to American relatives, a task which has grown much in importance and scope and which has brought with it many evidences of appreciation on the part of people intimately affected by it.

The night was made notable for the mediator through the hospitality of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity. W. J. Mulkey, Jr. stood sponsor for ye Monmouth scribe and assured the twenty three other boys in the fraternity that their jewels and valuable papers were safe for the time being. It was a real pleasure to be received as one of the boys and to enjoy a bunk out on the sleeping porch where the fraternity slumbered when it felt so inclined.

They are a group of fine fellows who compose that fraternity and we endorse them one and all for anything from Assistant Keeper of the Bludgeon in the Ancient Order of Heavy Swatters to the Presidency of the United States.

Job Printing and Costs was the subject of the morning session and in the course of a short interval it developed that most of the printers of Oregon were philanthropists who were recruited for their efforts by a benevolent feeling of having performed charitable deeds rather than any financial emoluments which appertained to the same.

Mr. Robey of Oregon City, which evidently is one town where printers get their deserts, was a leader in uncovering this scandal of Oregon printorial inefficiency; and Elbert Bede who looks like a Norwegian minister but who has made a reputation as editor of the Cottage Grove Sentinel, also helped along with the good work.

A final luncheon was given in Hendrick Hall, the girls' dormitory of the university and here President Campbell took occasion to give a few boosts to the project for the Woman's building at the university and also impartially urged support of the bonding re-construction act for its effect on the University, the Agricultural College and the Normal.

Before closing we must mention Dean Allen of the School of Journalism, who although he has a pedagogical habit of rambling in his remarks, directed the arrangements for the conference with much skill and has always stood as a friend of the big and little journalists of the state. Nor must we forget his assistant Mr. Turnbull, efficient and active to the needs of his associates; nor of the bright band of students who helped to make this strenuous twenty-four-hours a most pleasant one.

It was decided to make the conference an annual event to be held at the university each January.
