ROOSEVELT ON WAY HOME VISITS COX

DO YOU 'MEMBER

The day Fat and you found the big tramp dog (the one that you made the harness for)? 'Member how he followed you home from the woods where you'd been fishing? You tried to chase him away two or three times and he'd only run back a little way and stand and look at you. And finally you let him come up to you and he was all mud and smelled like he'd been havin' a tussel with a skunk. And Fat said: "Come on, what you say we keep him." 'Member how he jumped all over you after you decided to take him home? Seemed as though he understood all about it. And just about the time you got near the house Fat says, "Do you 'spos yer mother'll let you keep him?" And just about then you heard Ma's familiar voice: "No, I should say not; don't you dare bring that filthy creature another inch nearer this house!" BLUNK—and all the joy of life flew, and even the dog's ears dropped, and you looked at Fat and Fat looked at you. And then began the plea for the dog. 'Member how you promised Ma that you'd never let him in the house and you'd earn all the money to feed him and about fifty other promises, and after a while she says, "Well, go on, but take him somewhere and give him a bath; that awful smell will be all over your clothes." Oh! boy—'member how you felt then? And the dog begun waggin' his tail and you went back of the house and gave him a scrubbin'.

Buy Your Groceries in Quantities

Wise management means saving, and here is an opportunity to save. Buy in bigger quantities. We can sell for less when you buy in dozen or case lots. There will be a saving in your expenses if you will adopt the system of quantity buying for your requirements. The thrifty housewife knows that a well-stocked pantry is always an economy and a keen satisfaction when preparing the meal. Ask for quantity prices on staple groceries and note the saving.
