TURN FIREFLY TO ACCOUNT

How the Natural Light of the Insect is Utilized by Indians of the Antilles.

In Cuba and other islands of the Caribbean region there is a species of firefly so brilliantly luminous that pre-Columbian Indians used them for lantern lights, imprisoning them for the purpose in perforated gourds.

Cuban negroes still utilize them in the same way, confining a few of the insects in an ordinary glass lantern, which may be conveniently hung up in the hut or carried about on dark nights.

The Indians of the Antilles, long ago, made another use of the firefly lanterns, employing them for signaling. One great advantage they had was that their light could not be blown out by wind or put out by rain; and, with a sort of Morse code, the phototelegraphy was an exceedingly efficient means of sending messages distributing warnings of danger far and wide.

On occasions of nocturnal outdoor festivity in Cuba it is a common thing for ladies to adorn their gowns with these brilliant fireflies, which glow more brightly than any gems. The eggs laid by the insects are luminous, the firefly's light being thus handed down without extinguishment from generation to generation, each one passing the torch along, as it were, to the next.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

How to Kill Weeds. Any weed, no matter how big, may be killed by a method described by St. Leonard Bastin in the Scientific American, as follows:

Cut off the top growth down to the ground. Then scoop out the central stalk as much as possible and fill the little cavity with salt. If possible, do this in dry weather. When rain occurs and the salt dissolves, quickly place a fresh amount on the roof. At the end of three days (if the salt has not been washed away) it will have penetrated to every part of the root and the weed will never give any more trouble.

In the case of dandelions growing in clumps, the hollow should be made large enough to permit the salt to seep down into the various roots. Salt will easily kill grass; so particular pains should be taken not to spill when working upon the weeds.
