How to Grow
Better Peas

The home gardener, who still clings to the idea that "peas is peas" and that one variety is pretty much the same as another, certainly ought to secure a copy of a book just off the press, which deals with peas and other desirable vegetables.

The book referred to is the 1922 issue of Lilly's Seed Annual. This guide from Western America's greatest seed house gives a wealth of information about a wide variety of peas that have been acclimated here. These varieties have been thoroughly tested and each has proved its superiority for certain requirements. With Lilly's Seed Annual in hand, the gardener can select just the varieties he wants, with the assurance that if he follows instructions he is almost certain of excellent results.

Peas are easy to grow in the Pacific Northwest and if the directions given in this Seed Annual are carefully followed no one who has even a small plot of ground need be without this delicious spring vegetable. Peas are one of the most striking examples of the fact that produce fresh picked from your own garden has a flavor which cannot be equaled by vegetables that have stood for a time after gathering.

This book also tells how to plant and tend the different crops of peas so as to have a succession of them from early spring until well along in the summer and gives suggestions how to prepare the ground.

The new issue of Lilly's Annual also contains a splendid array of other vegetables, all of which have been tested and proved by this reliable old house. There are sections, too, devoted to flower seeds with reliable information for users drawn from a long and ripe experience with the growing of vegetables and flowers in the Pacific Northwest. In addition there is a catalog of the most dependable fertilizers, sprays, bee and poultry supplies, etc.

Altogether, Lilly's 1922 Seed Annual is a book that no gardener, amateur or professional should be without. A copy is available free on request at your dealer's or from the Chas. H. Lilly Co., Seattle, Portland or Yakima. Get one today and prepare for early planting.

E. B. ARNOLD

For the first time in many years the Monmouth hotel is being operated by an actual owner. Mr. Sivier, the new proprietor, has invested his money here and is entitled to encouragement and a square deal from our citizens. He has given the premises a thorough renovation and plans to make a number of improvements. He can do this in direct proportion as he is given encouragement by the people of Monmouth.

Normal Chapel, January 11

The Lyceum Management wishes again to call attention to the extra number on the course which will occur in the Normal Chapel Wednesday evening, January 11, when Miss Janet Young and Mr. Byron Foulger present a series of one act plays.

Seldom is it the privilege of smaller communities to hear artists of such gifts and accomplishments.

Miss Young and Mr. Foulger ordinarily appear only in the larger places. They have played in many of the cities of this country, including New York, the Mecca of all actors and theatre lovers, as well as in the cities of Canada, Australia and New Zealand. Associated intimately with the "Little Theatre Movement" they have but recently completed an engagement with the Repertory Company of Maurice Browne, who is known as the "Father of the Little Theatre". As the "Little Theatre" stands for perfection of artistry, for the highest achievement in the realm of the drama, so we may be assured that these actors closely connected with
