Arthur Jepson, who moved here last summer from Chinook, Montana, says the winter of 1908 was a record breaker there. It was fifty below for days and so cold that steers from the neighboring range crowded into the streets of the city in the lee of store buildings for shelter, in places so numerous and the cattle so desperate that they could not be driven off and people could not enter nor leave the stores. Many of the cows had their tails frozen off and the bushy part of the tails were to be seen in many places on the snow.

In Newberry's Seat

James Couzens, millionaire mayor of Detroit and former partner of Henry Ford, is the new U. S. Senator from Michigan, appointed to the Truman H. Newberry seat, the office to which Ford aspired against Newberry in the now famous election scandals, which finally resulted in Newberry's resignation this month.
