WOOL GROWERS' CONTRACTS ARE UPHELD BY COURT

The Pacific Cooperative Wool Growers, the cooperative wool marketing Association has obtained a decree in the Circuit Court of Lane County, Oregon against Henry Knebel & Paul Camenzind, of Junction City, whom the Association claimed had violated their agreement to market all of their wool and mohair through the Association.

It was contended that the defendants had marketed their wool sheared in 1922, outside of the Association and the Association sued for 6 cents per pound liquidated damages, for court costs, and expenses, and attorney's fees, and a permanent injunction against said growers selling any wool or mohair produced or acquired or controlled by them directly or indirectly to any person, firm, or corporation other than the Association until January 1, 1926.

In the decree rendered by Judge Skipworth, the defendants are ordered and commanded to deliver their wool and mohair and to specifically perform the contract heretofore entered into with the Association, and a permanent injunction granted.

This is considered an important decision and materially strengthens the position of the wool growers' association. This case is the first which has been brought to a conclusion by the wool growers' association, and the decision is in line with that affirmed by the Oregon Supreme Court in the case of the Oregon Growers' Cooperative Association, a fruit marketing association, vs. Lents, and establishes the validity of the wool marketing contract.

As a result of this decision numerous other growers are tendering payment of damages to the association before suit is filed. The association has been awaiting this decision before prosecuting other members who are claimed to have violated the condition of their marketing agreement in 1922, and promises vigorous prosecution of all offenders

CHEMIST THE "CZAR" OF CEMENT MANUFACTURE

High and uniform quality results from his rigid tests and orders

Every eight seconds, mechanical devices dip into the materials that are traveling through a cement mill and put a sample under lock and key for the chemist to test. Chemists are "the czars" of a cement plant and chemistry is their law.

Few factory processes require more care than the making of cement—thousands of test samples being taken in a day's run at a cement plant because cement must be tested in a variety of ways for numerous qualities. It is under the chemist's instructions that workmen proportion the raw materials.

These tests in which the proportions of the elements of cement are determined call for glass-enclosed balances or scales that must be accurate to the ten-thousandth of a gram. There are 454 grams to a pound. Such balances will quickly detect the difference in weight of a piece of paper, before and after you have written your name on it.

The "rule" of the chemist is seen and felt at every point in the process of cement manufacture—in the quarry or pit where raw materials are obtained—in the departments where raw materials are proportioned, mixed and ground—in the burning department where under intense heat the chemical change takes place—in the department where the raw material which has now become clinker is ground to the fine powder called portland cement.

This country put over thirty million tons of cement making material through these processes last year.

This device takes a test sample for the chemist every 8 seconds. "B" is the cement on a moving belt, leaving the grinding mill. "C" is a revolving hollow shaft. As the dipper picks up a bit of the flour-like material it is carried through the shaft "C" and deposited in the locked box "A".
