Monmouth Meditations

It is an old saying that "there is plenty of room at the top," and this is well demonstrated by the post season series that settles the annual championship in base ball. The fact that J. J. McGraw has so often figured in at the end of the season series is evidence that he has few peers as a judge of and organizer of men in that particular line. Some have gathered single combinations of players that have had the supreme skill, but very few have repeated, while Mc Graw has developed at least four championship teams.

Cornelius McGillicuddy, better known as Connie Mack, has developed three championship teams and his success has been more spectacular, for it is his custom when he gets the right combination, to sell them out at fancy prices and start in anew. Usually a championship combination will last three years. Mack realizes there is the inevitable slump and disposes of his players while they are at their best. Frank Selee was a great judge of ball players. He developed two sets of champions, one for Boston and the other for Chicago and the unique part about it was that he had never been a professional player himself.

He never was robust and died when he should have been in his prime. Ned Hanlon and Charles Comisky were also notably successful in building up ball teams and with the other three mentioned, they probably comprise the whole list of great managers the game has produced.

Without a doubt, McGraw leads them all. His talent takes peculiar shape in that he imparts supreme skill to players who without him would be ordinary. He never has developed more than one or two great players, the most notable being Christy Mathewson. He studies the opposing players, discovers their weaknesses and forces his men to profit thereby. It is said many games are played by his team in which he directs every move they make. He prefers college men to the street type of player. He says the intellectual discipline they get is of great value to them. He is loyal to his players and goes out of his way to show encouragement to individual players who perhaps made some blunder which won them the disfavor of the bleachers. He picks old time associates, whose playing days are over, and who have difficulty in keeping up in other work, and gives them jobs at the ball park. There is a streak of the plug ugly in him which earns him the title of "Muggsy" and he has been known to assault newspaper reporters and others who have said things that offended him.

In the late series it was evident all the time that his rivals had the better team. The Yankees outclassed the Giants. But such was the reputation of McGraw and the fear which his long record has inspired that the American League champs played at least three games before they discovered their power.

Some savage criticism is being aimed these days at modern results in distribution of industrial and agricultural products. The spread between production and consumption is so large that naturally critics aim to lessen. Yet it must be admitted that a great deal of the criticism is destructive rather than constructive. This loss can hardly be the fault of the retailer or jobber for investigation will show that more people fail than succeed in a financial way in either kind of service. Great wealth is not made that way. There is no restriction as to who will compose the ranks of the retailer and jobber and any one who wishes to try his hand at it can do so at his own financial risk. It is probably true that systems can be devised to get products from the producer to the consumer at less cost but it is a melancholy fact that too many of those who seek to lead the way are men with political bents of mind who never have been conspicuously successful in their own business but who are positive they would be regular whiz bangs in capacity and shrewdness when it comes to directing the business of other people.

A great deal of the criticism now being leveled at the income tax is calculated to make friends for it. Much of it is so very unfair that it leaves you wondering as to the actuating motive. Of course no income tax proposed would in its provisions prove absolutely perfect and defects in the proposed bill can be remedied by future legislation. We feel that the cry the law would keep out capital is not entirely true. The aim of the law is to reach people who are not now carrying their just share of the tax burden and just that much it should relieve the tax on real property. This being the case outside capital can be promised lower realty taxes and as to the income tax they do not have to pay anything unless they make ample profits.

A town of the prospects and aspirations of Monmouth can not afford to be without a library. Many people move here with children to be schooled and a library makes the town more attractive to them. It is only the most permanent and substantial in literature that is preserved in books and a familiarity with books is an asset to character. The name of having a library is a recommendation to a town. The most economical and effective way of operating a library is through the county library system. It is to the interest of the citizens of Monmouth and vicinity to support the county library proposal at the polls in the coming election.

SHE IS A CAREFUL DRIVER

To the Editor:

In regard to the car accident which happened on our streets a few weeks ago, I want to say that I have ridden with the Heffleys more perhaps than any other person out side of their immediate family and have, always found Jo a most efficient and capable driver—always alert to what the oncoming driver is going to do.

It has been reported that she has had numerous accidents. This is untrue. This is her first accident.

Several years ago, through no fault of hers, a car which was driven at an excessive rate of speed ran into her car on the hill here by my place.

She is no amateur driver. About seven years ago she drove to Newport and the road at that time was not easy to drive over. It consisted of narrow, dangerous grades and sharp curves which made it very hard to see cars coming in the opposite direction. She, however, made the trip without any trouble, and I can say from experience that this required some skill and a steady nerve.

It is a regrettable fact that these accidents are happening every day—and it is just as liable to happen to one person as another.

Mrs. C. E. Herren.

Two Monmouth students have been pledged to fraternities at the Oregon Agricultural College. They are Phillip Partridge, Kappa Sigma; and Frank Loughary, Jr., Theta Chi.

The University of Oregon is giving a series of radio lectures from the Oregonian Tower each Friday evening from 9:00 to 9:30, dealing with resources of Oregon.
