Mr. J. M. Tedrow was a business visitor in Monmouth Tuesday.

The waters of the Salt and Verdo rivers carry the drainage from some 12,250 square miles of territory. If this water could be properly stored and carefully spread over this great unproductive area during the "growing" season fabulous crop wealth would naturally result.

By the building of a tremendous dam a reservoir was formed which holds the water which formerly went to waste. This dam (Roosevelt) is 1,125 feet long on top and 280 feet high in the center, and contains 342,325 cubic yards of building material. The reservoir extends some 20 miles up stream and holds sufficient water to cover 1,365,000 acres one foot deep. To properly and efficiently handle such a herculean task as the storing and distribution of such a stupendous volume of water over such a broad area, it was necessary to construct and bring into use an intricate and far-reaching system of spillways, tunnels, hydraulic gates and something like 750 miles of canals.

Some idea of the success of this project can be glimpsed from the crop report for the year 1920. The irrigated area had been divided into 4,200 farms which boasted a population of 31,000 and contained eight towns which had forty-one schools and forty-five churches and housed 32,199 persons. These 4,200 farms yielded the following crops, in bushels: barley, 178,520; corn, 66,985; oats, 67,390; wheat, 95,285; sorghum grain, 22,388; beans, 1,490; potatoes, 11,700; 13,671,000 lbs of fruits; 28,465,000 lbs. of cotton, 100,936 tons of alfalfa hay and 42,700 tons of cotton seed. The farms on this project also contained 5,137 sheep; 8,662 hogs; 254,572 chickens, turkeys, geese, etc., and 13,819 hives of bees.

Thus the magic-like touch of the U. S. reclamation service "maketh the desert to blossom as the rose."
