Turkeys Roost on Auto Driver Takes Them Home

That old song, "I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier," has been paraphrased by J. M. Mishler, Mill Creek farmer, into "I didn't raise my turkeys to joy ride with you," since Enos Hostettler, farmer of Rock Creek drove off Tuesday evening with two Thanksgiving-day specials perched high and fast on the top of his car.

Mr. Hostettler had called at the Mishler farm Tuesday and parked his car in one of the sheds. In his absence, the two turkeys, coming in to roost for the night, espied the auto took a fancy to it, flew on top and settled for a night of sweet repose. In blissful ignorance of their presence, Mr. Hostettler entered the car, backed out of the shed and started for Sheridan, on his way home.

Like acrobatic geniuses, the turkeys kept their places although it is understood they thought they were speeding on a dreamland special. Meanwhile Mr. Hostettler rambled on, wondering the while at the queer grins and astonishment of the people he met. Not until he reached Sheridan, half way home, did he find out what it was all about. He immediately got into communication with Mr. Mishler, to assure him he had not eloped with the birds.—Sheridan Sun.

Vetch and oats were not so satisfactory for fattening pigs on grain in western Oregon as alfalfa, clover, rape, and winter wheat in tests conducted by the experiment station animal husbandry department. They did not stand the grazing so well nor do they grow after being eaten of.

Change from corn silage to oats and vetch silage was made for the O. A. C. dairy herd in feeding tests without loss of appetite or other apparent ill affects. In abrupt changes from either of these silages to sunflower silage the cows refused to eat except in one case.

The death of red raspberries, black caps, and loganberries in Oregon patches, may first appear in short crop of fruit and reduced growth of vine. To protect sound hills the removal of all hills that show indications of the trouble is recommended by the experiment station plant pathologists.

SPARKS AND FLASHES

Where there's smoke, there's fire,—pinch out that cigarette.

Wise is the camper who knows how to put out his fire,—and does it.

"Till the Brands of Your Campfire Grow Cold,"—sing it with water.

Who burns a forest burns the welfare of the world.

Somebody invent a cigarette that won't burn by the roadside.

FIRE: The cheer of the camp; but the death of the forest.

Forsake not your campfire until it is dead.

As the spark is left so the fire will spread.

SMILEY'S RETURN FROM TRIP TO NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Smiley and sons Joe and Clifford have returned from a motor trip to Nova Scotia, the old home of Mr. Smiley and where his mother still resides.

Very excellent time was made on the return trip, the run from Boston here being made in 15 days with Nova Scotia about three days farther away.

It had been about 20 years since Mr. Smiley left home and this was his first return visit. In the estimation of Mr. Smiley, Nova Scotia has not progressed as rapidly as the states in improvements, the residents there being inclined to be satisfied with doing things as their fathers did before them, but he can see evidences of an awakening. There has been some road improvement and others are contemplated.

In Massachusetts, where the Smileys spent some time, there is much apparent prosperity, fine farm buildings and hard surfaced roads are the gen-

DALLAS MAN NAMED

AS FIRE WARDEN

The state forestry department today announced the appointment of W. A. Langille as district fire warden at Dallas to succeed John Grant, who found it necessary to resign to attend to a hop yard of 25 acres, which, it is reported was flattened upon the ground by the recent rain. The hops are said to be of exceptional quality, and unless they are immediately raised from the ground will be ruined by moulding.—Capital Journal.

Suit Against Baker Dropped

By Charles Greg. The suit against R. W. Baker, of the peace of Independence, has been dismissed without prejudice on motion made by attorneys for Mr. Gregory. It was found that a suit of this nature could only be brought by the county and a settlement for the amount, which had previously been tendered to the state game commission, was accepted.—Observer.

Adding organic material to worn Oregon soils increases their water capacity and improves their tilth. The added material was either barnyard manure or green manure in tests made the experiment station. These materials also added beneficial bacteria.

"This is where a pinch in time would have saved nine," said the cigarette smoker who had started a forest fire, when the judge gave him nine days.

Cougar Gets Prey Near Cottage Grove

A cougar devouring a goat which he had come down into a thickly settled section to get, was surprised Saturday forenoon by W. L. Black, flume walker for the Walter A. Woodard Lumber company. Mr. Black's attention was attracted by the cries of the goat. He had no gun but he yelled at the cougar. The animal did not drop his prey, however, merely carrying it back into the woods where he would not be disturbed at his breakfast.

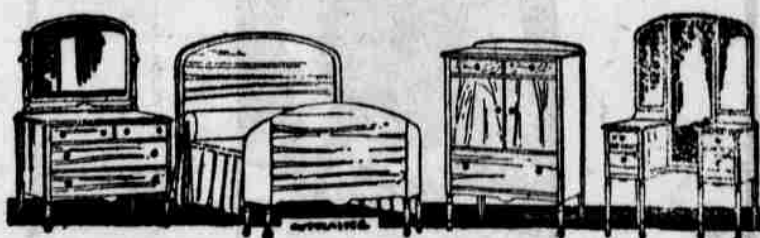

N. W. White, owner of the goat and of one of the farm lands over which the flume runs, organized a party who got sight of the cougar but as they did not take guns with them they merely scared it further into the woods. Another party, with dogs and guns, was organized Sunday morning but this time the cougar was not seen, a slight rainfall overnight having obliterated the animal's tracks.

Mr. Black had several times noticed a commotion in the thicket where he surprised the cougar but paid no attention to it, not supposing that wild animals would come to the spot, which is close to the N. W. White hay barn and but a short distance from the Coast fork road, main artery of traffic.—Cottage Grove Sentinel.
