VOLUME 2 NUMBER 12

The Assembly Entertained

Barbara of the sixth grade read a delightful little story to the assembly last Tuesday. She discontinued her reading in a very interesting place. It was one of those stories in which the development leads you to an exciting incident, stops abruptly, and invites you to use your imagination in the completion of the story. The narrative was continued by Everett, whose story was so finished that it was hard to tell that it was not the work of the original author.

Appreciated

Once upon a time there was an old lady who liked flowers. She always took a bouquet to church with her every Sunday. She also gave many bouquets to the school children that passed her house every morning. But one day she died. And never again was the church or school rooms decorated so beautifully.

—Twila Tittle.

Mr. Johnston was given a book the other day, whose title was, "What a Man Knows About a Woman." When he opened the book he saw nothing but blank pages.

THRIFT WEEK

Thrift week was duly observed in the Training School. The upper grade classes memorized the "Ten Commandments", embodying Benjamin Franklin's principles of thrift.

Every little bit added to what you have, makes a little bit more. If the money paid for the site of land on which New York City is located, had been placed at the time of purchase, on interest at 6% compounded semi-annually, how much of the city could be bought today, with the sum accumulated?

Caution Characterizes Economy—

At least this is what R. R. believes, judging by his little story of,

A Bunco Game

Many times we see advertisements like the following: "An opportunity of a lifetime, a chance to make enormous profits. The wonderful island of Palmetto Del Verde is now open for settlement. A paradise island that will produce anything. Many people have already bought and only a limited number of acres left. So act quick while the land is still cheap."

It seems as if any sensible person would know better than to make such an investment without first seeing the land. However, many capable business men and educated people were foolish enough to invest in this property and lost a great deal of money. The promoter who got the people to buy was an honest looking fellow and made everything he said so reasonable that no one doubted him.

One should always remember that to buy "sight-unseen" is much like a lottery. Sometimes you win a prize, but more often you lose. To lose a large sum of money is a great tragedy, because it often means great denial to ourselves and our families. So we should be careful about venturing in any "get-rich-quick" schemes.

A Business Letter

The seventh grade English class was told to write a business letter to some firm, asking for a catalog in which they were especially interested. It is needless to say that the following letter was written by a Boy.

Monmouth, Oregon

January 24, 1927

Box —

Colt's Patent Firearms Mfg Co.—
I would like to get a catalog for to see the Different Kind of Guns. And I would like to get a Pistol.

Yours truly,

Let's Laugh

Who knows what makes folks laugh? A student will fall down, or will offer a bright saying and you will laugh until the tears roll down your cheeks. Another sees the same sight; hears the same words; but he yawns and appears bored. A second later he picks up a paper; turns to the comic strip and chuckles so loudly that you hasten to his side to see what it is that is so funny.

Haven't you ever read some humorous story—one supposed to be amusing—and found that it was too silly to bring a smile, but when you began to relate it to some one, the listener would burst into fits of laughter and before you knew it, you too, would join the chorus and laugh? Or haven't you gone over to the Normal movies and been pained by the antics employed by the screen artists in their efforts to make you laugh. (Esop Fables) until the audience, forgetful of its dignity, let loose and "roared?" You then discovered how amusing laughing folks are and you laughed so much yourself that your poor old sides just ached.

Laughing is a contagion. Anyone can acquire the habit of being jocund. One need not be in a school room long to know whether the students ever smile above a whisper. We enjoy hearing others laugh heartily. It is such a splendid tonic for our souls. Some of us are over serious. We walk around with our lips turned down and the weight of the world on our shoulders. How much more do you suppose we could accomplish in our school work and social life if we would let go occasionally and laugh until our associates caught the spirit and helped us in the fun making. After such an experience all of us would have a brighter point of view. When we are inclined to forget to laugh let's remember that it takes a great many more muscles to make a frown, than to make a smile, so why work overtime? Laughter is to be a tonic for our spirits; we can seldom get an overdose.

SNOW

"Hurrah it's snowing! snowing!" Shouted the boys and girls as they ran out to play;

We no longer will stay by the fire-side glowing;

For the snow may last but a day.

We will make a snow man oh, so bold.

He shall wear one of dad's old hats;

We will put a coat on him, for he may be very cold;

But we'll let his arms stick out,

cause they're brother's bats.

—Mable Robison.

STORY HOUR

The Hunting Trip

Robert Price—5th Grade

Once when my father and brother were hunting up on the Yukon River in Alaska they had killed but one large moose and a small one. As they were going along one afternoon, just about dark, there in the west was the most beautiful sunset that they had ever seen. They sat down and watched the sun until it was dusk. As they went on down the river towards camp my brother happened to glance out over the water. There in the water was a very large moose. My father and brother stood there gazing at the sunset and neither one of them shot at the moose. They were too interested in the picture. As they were standing there they saw a pack of about four coyotes leap out. My father raised his gun and shot. He killed the moose and then all of the coyotes. When they got back they said it was the most wonderful hunting trip they had ever had.

The Iris Bracelet

By Florence H.

The minds of some of the leading detectives in the country were busily at work on what appeared to be one of the greatest mysteries of the years. A bracelet of sapphire had been taken from the home of Colonel Brunswick. After a careful investigation no clew had been found as to how it had disappeared.

The bracelet in question was an heirloom of considerable value. On the evening that the bracelet was found missing, Colonel Brunswick had entertained as his dinner guest, Major J. L. Anderson, an old time friend. Mr. Brunswick had remembered having taken the bracelet from the vault to show to Major Anderson. He also distinctly remembered that after the Major was gone, he replaced the bracelet.

The colonel was deeply distressed. "It is not so much the loss of the money value, that I mind," the colonel would often say, "but it is because it belonged to Selina. It had her likeness engraved on the back of one of the stones. The only possession that Selina really cherished."

Selina, the only daughter of Colonel Brunswick, and her mother, had been lost in a shipwreck many years ago. The colonel found the bracelet when the bodies were recovered.

The bracelet was unusual in its design. The sapphires were carved in the form of an iris and were circled by small diamonds. On the plain face of the largest sapphire was the engraved likeness of a young girl with long curls.

Months of anxious waiting had passed and still no trace of the lost treasure. The colonel was saddened. His friends said the worry had cut him down terribly. Added to this grief was the sudden death of the major, his life long friend. The major had made a trip to Europe, and for reasons unknown, he had committed suicide. Some time after the cable announcing the fact had been received, a small package addressed to the colonel, came. The package contained the lost bracelet. As the colonel stood gazing upon the bright blue thing, his glance rested on the letter bearing the same post mark. With trembling hands he opened it and read as follows:

My dearest Friend:
It was I who took the bracelet. I needed money to pay an urgent debt. I saw the bracelet could be pawned for a goodly sum, so I returned later and got possession of it.

It is impossible to take what is not yours and escape the penalty. It weighed heavily on my conscience for days. When I looked at the dear little girl with the curls, and whose trusting eyes looked into mine, I was overcome. One cannot forget the truth. I have sinned. It is my privilege to try to repair the wrong. Forgive me, and when you think of
