NEWS FROM PACIFIC HIGHWAY

Things grow rapidly out west. One cannot take a flying trip back east without finding, on his return, that the nephew he left as a round-eyed baby is now in knickerbockers and is asking questions; that the nursery slip he planted in front of the door just before his departure is now interfering with the telegraph wires and the paving.

One of the best examples of phenomenal growth on the Coast is the Pacific highway. Little more than a year ago this project was conceived as a road to connect Oregon, Washington and California. It was taken up with enthusiasm by the general public; and newspapers in every community ran column after column about it. Before long its planners had succeeded in marking the highway through Washington. Now it has gone through Oregon and is pausing for a moment on the California line.

At the completion of the work in the evergreen state, the Pacific Highway Association nicknamed their road "The Road of Three Nations." They decided to invade Mexico and British Columbia.

British Columbia was more than willing. The Provincial government appropriated large sums for construction; and announced its intention of making the Pacific Highway passable clear through to the Alaska border. The recent success of P. E. Sands in marking the trail from Ashcroft to Hazelton assures the early completion of this work. Now that the Hazelton trophy is in the hands of its winner, motorists' eyes are turned toward a similar medal, to go the first car which reaches Mexico City from San Diego. It is not likely that the golden wheel will rest long unclaimed. About a month ago the officers of the Association began to discuss Mexico with more interest. Towns were marked on maps, possible routes were laid out in pencil; tours were scheduled for next summer. Such runs will be made under much more favorable conditions than prevailed last summer, since a strong man is now in power in the turbulent republic. Today, with interest stronger than ever, with the attention of the whole nation centered on the Pacific Highway as one of a great chain of national roads, its originators are contemplating no less a plan than the extension of the Pacific Highway to the Straits of Magellan. A route has not yet been definitely selected.

PETRIFIED FIG TREE AT COTTAGE GROVE

The fertile Willamette Valley was formerly the home of tropical fruit of all kinds. This theory is well borne out by the recent finding of a petrified fig and a perfect impression of a leaf of the same tree. It may well be imagined that what is now the Willamette Valley was in those torrid days the Garden of Eden, and the leaf may be one of Old Adam's discarded dress suits. Of this latter, however, there is no positive proof.

The specimens referred to, were found on the farm of W. G. Gowdy, one mile from Cottage Grove, where J. M. Hamilton, an oil engineer, who recently blew in from Victoria, B. C., has been at work prospecting for coal. Mr. Hamilton has not as yet found coal, but he feels certain that he is in an oil formation, and that he will soon develop something. The specimens were found seven and one-half feet under ground and in three feet of solid rock. The print of the fig leaf is on a piece of sedimentary chalk. Dr. W. W. Oglesby, who has made some study of geology, has the specimens in his possession. -Cottage Grove Sentinel.

OREGON PENSIONS LEADING

WASHINGTON, Oct. 9.—A study of the rolls at the pension office discloses the fact that while the state of Washington has the largest number of pensioners of any western state and Montana the smallest number, those of Oregon receive by far the greatest amount of money.
