TWO WOOD ENGRAVERS LEFT

Their Art Was Swamped by Photo-Mechanical Process, but May Be Revived.

The possibility of a revival of the art of wood engraving is an ever-recurring subject of discussion. It will be found to lie in painter-engraving, that is original effort, rather than in the reproductive art in which so consummate an achievement was attained in our days.

In the last quarter of the nineteenth century the United States witnessed a development of reproductive wood engraving carried to what was apparently the limit of its possibilities in the suggestion of tones and textures. The glorious period of success was as remarkable in its products as it was short in duration. The photo-mechanical process, particularly the now ubiquitous half-tone, swept all before them, and only two noteworthy members of the group of men who made American wood engraving famous—Cole and Wolf—are today still regularly practicing the art.

The decay of wood engraving has been deplored in print and speech not a few times, and not infrequently in apparent forgetfulness of the fact that not only will necessarily insure the survival of that which fits its case, but in this case the revival is already with us. But the art has arisen in a new form, or rather there is a renaissance of an old form. It is an open question whether there will ever again be a general use of wood engraving for the purpose of reproducing paintings or drawings or photographs. But there is no doubt that an increasing number of artists have been turning to the wood block, as they have to etching or lithography, as a means of original, direct expression. Painter-wood-engraving is coming to its own.

In this country, the desire for original work first took the form of engraving direct from nature by some of the men who had helped to bring reproductive wood engraving to its high state of development. Ellridge Kinsley, W. B. Closson, the late Victor Bernstrom, Henry Wolf and Frank French, long known as discerning interpreters of the designs and paintings of others, felt the impulse of original creation and brought to its service their long training and artistic temperament. —Wellenkamp in Scribner's.

Learn to Swim.

Of the thirty-third victim of drowning in the waters near St. Louis this season his mother said: "He was a wonderful athlete. He could do anything except swim, and I'm sure I don't know why he never learned." It is evident that this mother was not adverse to her son's learning to swim. Unfortunately many women are opposed to boys acquiring this useful art, fearing accidents while learning. This is unwise.

If one travels at all, it is impossible to avoid the water. With two-thirds of the earth's surface covered by water the chances are numerous that ignorance of swimming may be fatal. Swimming is one of the most healthful and enjoyable of exercises, with advantages of still greater importance. The drowning of good swimmers is exceptional. While the loss of life of those who cannot swim and get into deep water is the rule. Swimming should be taught in all the schools, and those who have not acquired the art as children should learn it at once. —St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Bishop Was Ready for Them.

A story is told of a certain Norman bishop, who preached so eloquently against the wearing of long hair before Henry I. and his courtiers, that they gave in on the spot and agreed to have their locks shorn. No sooner had they made their decision than the wise prelate, who had provided for just such a contingency, pulled out a pair of shears from his sleeve and soon removed the curls of the whole court.

Benny on the Carp.

The German carp is a creature shaped so as to resemble a fish. It can swim in any kind of water, and has one eye on each side of its head. Its food consists of small black bass and three cornered pieces of boiled potato. You catch a carp by throwing a stone in the water to attract its attention and then letting down a hook baited with a nice piece of garbage. There are people in St. Joe who will pay ten or fifteen cents for a big, fat carp, but as for me I would rather have a Welsh rabbit or a pound of angel cake. —Benny, in the Chicago Tribune.

Sure Enough.

FEW POLICEMEN IN BOSTON

New York Woman, Who Had Lost Her Way, Discovers Officer After Walking Many Blocks.

A young woman from New York, on one of her rare visits to Boston, found herself getting unusually bewildered in the labyrinth of streets converging at the South Terminal station. With the immediate instinct of the New Yorker, who can usually be sure of finding an officer stationed at every crossing, she turned to look for a policeman. But no policeman was forthcoming.

After walking a good many blocks she at last sighted a bluecoat. But he was going in the wrong direction—the direction away from her. At the end of a hundred yards of hot pursuit she overtook him.

"Oh," she gasped, "are you the only policeman in Boston?"

The stalwart son of Erin stood looking quizzically down on her; then his face widened in a slow smile.

"No, lady," he said, and his grin broadened in appreciative tribute to the flushed earnestness of the face upturned to his. "There's me, and a boy."

—Youth's Companion.

Baby Liked the Tag.

"They have the finest plan up in Warren," said a stout lady in a department store; "people who attend revival meetings in the tabernacle can leave their babies in a nursery near the entrance."

"How do they keep track of them?" inquired her companion.

"Easiest thing in the world," was the reply. "They tag them."

"Huh!" exclaimed the friend, "not for mine."

"What is your objection to the plan?" came the inquiry.

"I tried that once when Billy Sunday was in town," was the reply, "and my baby ate the tag."

TALKED A WHOLE LOT.

Wigson—When your wife caught you hugging the chambermaid I suppose she was speechless with amazement.

Wagson—Speechless! Say, you don't know my wife.

Remarkable.

"A funny thing happened at the banquet last night."

"Did somebody quit speaking before he had made everybody weary?"

"No, a preacher who was called on for some remarks succeeded in getting through without telling a story that had a cussword in it."

The Trouble.

"I hear that Mr. and Mrs. Wrightson are living apart. What is the trouble?"

"The same trouble that has caused many another man and woman to separate. He had an idea that she was his wife, but it was her belief that he was merely her husband."

The Invalid.

"You know that ballplayer who has a glass arm, a weak knee and a game ankle—the one who only finished in five games during the season?"

"Yes; what about him?"

"He's going to work in a stoneyard through the winter."

Unconscious Truth.

We Have Met Him.

"Would you call Bliggins a clever man?"

"Certainly," replied Miss Cayenne.

"He is not intellectual, but he is wonderfully clever in concealing the fact from strangers."

Justifiable Suspicion.

"I guess I must be getting old."

"Why do you think so?"

"A pretty girl dropped one of her gloves on the sidewalk this morning and I permitted another man to beat me to it."

Surely Not.

Belle—Don't you think conditions adapt themselves to the fashions?

Beulah—Oh, yes, when the women wore crinolines they didn't have these little narrow flats."

No Taste for Them.

"I notice that you always have a box at the horse show. Are you a lover of horses?"

"Oh, dear me! I'm a strict vegetarian."

Accommodating.

Tramp—Ma'am, I want a bite.

Woman—All right. Here, Towser!

Why Old Myths Survive.

The destroyers of fine dramatic myths tell us nowadays that the Caliph Omar did not burn the ancient library of Alexandria, and therefore did not have a chance to say that all the books in it that agreed with the Koran were superfluous, and all that disagreed with the Koran were pernicious. Doubtless the perennial freshness and vitality of the tale are due to an everlasting normal human hatred of weed-grown, literary graveyards.
