A DRUGGIST'S WORD

A druggist's word could be as good as his bond. In recommending a medicine or drug sundry he should not be influenced to recommend an impure article because his profit is larger on it than one he knows to be actually better for his customer. A druggist who will do such an act is not worthy of his profession, nor of the confidence and patronage of the public. IT IS ONLY NATURAL that the general public is not in a position to know the merits and demerits of the various articles found in drug stores. Consequently you, as one person of expert, conscientious advice when you buy a drugstore article, about which you know very little and which can be of great benefit or the opposite, according to its actual value. We want you to feel that you can put absolute confidence in what we say about anything in our line, and that when we recommend a hair brush, a face cream or a family remedy as being a meritorious article we are not doing so for our own profit gain, but because our KNOWLEDGE and experience have led us to say only that what we believe to be true. We do as we would be done by.
