One of a Series of Informative Articles on Dental Hygiene—No. 7

What Causes Tooth Decay?

WE know that when food is left exposed to warm air for a given time it ferments or turns sour. Food caught between the teeth ferments, and this fermentation is usually caused by very small plants called micro-organisms. Food deposits in the mouth or in between the teeth soon ferment and decompose, forming an acid, which is a solvent for the enamel of the teeth. One decayed tooth affects its neighboring tooth.

It will thus be seen that decay is due to the presence of fermenting food particles in the mouth. Remove this by means of a tooth-brush, or dental floss, or by any other way, and you will help to prevent decay of teeth. Diseases which occur in childhood, such as tonsillitis, measles, diphtheria, scarlet fever, and others, cause the teeth to become liable to decay more easily. This is because during sickness the teeth do not receive proper nourishment and care. Very often the six-year molars come through with defective enamel. When this happens to them, or any other tooth, it is very important that they be kept clean until they can be treated and filled by the dentist.

While doing some excavating on the E. Clemens Horst Company ranch last week, workmen uncovered the skeleton of a human being. The coroner was notified, but nothing could be learned or any identity given of its burial on the farm. The body was covered under two feet of earth and is supposed to have been buried many years ago.

While crossing the railroad track on Monmouth street in H.E. Dunkell's automobile, Mrs. Brunk was thrown out on the pavement Thursday noon and bruised considerably. She was leaning against the door of the car, and the sudden jar while crossing the tracks, caused the door to swing open precipitating her to the ground. A physician was called, but her injuries were found not serious.
