How Harley Made Good

Harley had a family, a homestead—then the "flu." After the flu—money gone—debts a plenty. Jake said "Get a job like mine selling Parks Bros. Quality Groceries Wholesale to the Farmers. Save them 20%. Goods guaranteed. Satisfaction or Money Back." Now—debts paid; family happy; earning more money in one month than he used to in three. He's got two of his friends at work. We can use another good worker like Harley. Do you want the job? Write for Harley's proposition. Tell me your age and the work you've been doing. I'll tell you about it.

H. N. HUNTING, Care Parks Bros., Portland, Oregon.

(Read "How Ed Paid His Debts," this day next week.)

In James Stewart in his inimitable "Plocacosmos, or the Whole Art of Hairdressing," first published in London in 1782, tells how the wig gradually came to "declare the man." He speaks of "the huge tie peruke of the man of law," of the "long bob or patty scratch" of the tradesman and the "hunting peruke of the country gentleman"; while "the merchant men of business and of letters were distinguished by the grave, full bottom, or more moderate tie neatly curled."

The early Jews were literally loath to visiters and made good use of them. The Jew's beard was a so stances, notice of the world coming into state of mind. If every man was a wife and child and business good—his beard came out and perhaps oiled. He had entered his fan. He was a mere tangled hair. The condition of the beard indicated the existence of emps.

The Lincolnshire (Eng.) Architectural and Archaeological society has presented to the Lincoln City and County museum a charming little fibula of the time of Edward III or Richard II. The brooch is circular in shape and about half an inch across, and it was originally embellished with six emeralds. One of the emeralds is missing, but with this exception the specimen is perfect. An inscription on the back shows it to be a fourteenth century love token.
