Boy's Prayer a Gem.
 Ex-Governor Stone of Pennsylvania, who has just passed away, was a great lover of horses.
 His pet, as a youth, was a colt named Midnight.
 When Midnight—still a colt—died, as the result of a tumble, the boy was inconsolable.
 He tells in his autobiography, "The Tale of a Plain Man," about the funeral he conducted in solitude over the body of his four-footed friend.
 "I had no book, but I knelt down over his body and tried to say a prayer.
 "I prayed: 'Oh, Lord, if there is a horse heaven, let Midnight go to it. I hope there is, as I want to see Midnight again. Make me as good boy as Midnight was a colt.'
 "I had no audience, but a bluejay and a woodthrush were singing, and I heard a squirrel barking a bass chorus."

It Was No Place for It.
 The trial of Rollin Bunch, mayor, and Horace Murphy, prosecuting attorney of Muncie, was on in the United States district court at Indianapolis and every day Muncie persons and others who were acquainted with the remarkable case came too late to obtain seats in the courtroom. A Muncie young woman one day rushed impulsively up to a man acquaintance whose business took him inside the courtroom, and finding all the seats were taken she exclaimed, "Oh, can't you squeeze me in there?" "No," he responded gravely, "not in there."

PREY ON IGNORANT KOREANS

Mutangs, Claiming to Have Supernatural Powers, Make Good Living From Those They Victimise.

The Korean mutang, or mutang, is a sorceress who is considered the lowest of the low in the social system. Though generally married, she is always an abandoned character pretending to be a sort of spiritual medium, able by her friendship with the spirits to influence them as she may wish. The ceremony performed by a mutang, without which her services are of no avail, is called a "kut," there being ten different forms of services that can be performed by means of a kut.

The service most in demand is that of driving away the "hungry" spirits of disease. These spirits come around the door when people are eating, and if they are not thrown a morsel of food, they will hold a grievance against the diners. When a man, by some such mischance, contracts a disease, he sends for a mutang, describes his symptoms and asks what spirit it is that is causing it. The mutang usually names some spirit, says that he must see the patient, and names a day on which to hold the kut.

During the ceremony the mutang dances about near the patient until she has worked herself up to a perfect frenzy, her auditors believing that the spirit has taken possession of her body. She screams out the name of the spirit that has come, tells what must be done to cure the patient, until at last the spirit promises to take away the disease. The food provided for the spirit is then eaten with great gusto by the mutang and the friends of the sick man.

The mutang has a lot of influence. Some years ago when a drought was making life uncomfortable in Seoul the citizens went to a mutang and clamored for relief. She explained that the street car lines were pinching the tail of the dragon that guarded the town, and that the dragon was angry. He couldn't sleep and he wouldn't send the needed rain. The cars were destroyed that very night.

Valuable Coconut By-Product.

A number of oil-extracting plants have been established in the United States and Europe to handle copra, because it has been discovered that the pulp left after the coconut oil has been extracted is a very valuable stock food and can also be used as a fertilizer, and this by-product commands a good price.

As a stock food it compares favorably with gluten feed, though it contains less carbohydrates and more fat, ash and fibre. The oil is used for many purposes, including cooking or for salads, the making of fine soaps, etc.

There are at the present time in the Philippines approximately 40,000,000 bearing coconut trees, producing nearly 1,000,000,000 nuts per annum, of which 900,000,000 are made into copra. A coconut palm will yield from 25 to 30 nuts each year, and they are taken from the tree, when fully mature, about once every three or four months. The nuts are collected in piles near the drying or smoking sheds and the outer shell or fibre is torn away from the hard shell of the nut by means of a tool similar to the plover's. The nut is then split open with a large knife or bolo, and the halves, with the meat exposed, are placed over fires on racks constructed of wood, and are allowed to remain there until the meat drops from the shell. Where sun drying is practiced, the halved nuts are allowed to remain subjected to the sun's rays for a period of about six days, or until the meat loosens from the shell.

French Villages Americanized.

Vitrimont, "adopted" village of a group of California cities, is one of the first of the hundreds of French devastated towns to be entirely restored, according to a report of the American Red Cross. The ancient Gothic church of the town has been replaced by a modern stone structure which, while in conformity with the best traditions of French taste, nevertheless presents in its broad eaves a suggestion of Los Angeles. Likewise, the reconstructed "Mairie" or town hall contains features which are reminiscent of some of the most classic outlines of San Diego structures. Other buildings in the town were said to be representative of the architecture of San Francisco and various other California cities.

Good Teachers a Requisite.

The boy who would become a chemical expert has much to learn, observes a writer in Boys' Life. Thorough technical education is a necessity—such an education as it would be practically impossible to obtain outside of a good technical school. The field of chemistry is so wide and complex that no matter how much ability and industry a student may have he cannot get very far without the help of good instructors and a proper equipment for experiment. An intelligent young fellow working in an industrial plant may acquire by his own efforts a limited knowledge of the particular field of his work. He will be competent to carry on the work so long as no new problems arise; then, however, limited by his narrow knowledge of the science, he will be quite helpless.

Exercise; Don't Overeat.

Cattle are fattened for slaughter by being overfed and not allowed to exercise. Many men and women prepare themselves for slaughter by voluntarily adopting the "stall-fed life," says the United States public health service. Don't overeat and take plenty of healthful, outdoor exercise.
