—Among those here for the hopping season is Fred W. Prudhomme of Portland, who was employed as a printer on the old West Side 23 years ago. Accompanied by Mrs. Prudhomme and her son, Arthur Leighton, and A. P. Williams of Minot, North Dakota, he is at the McLaughlin yard south of town. To Mr. Prudhomme this will be his outing, as he has a regular situation as linotype operator on the Portland News.
—P. H. Drexler, who has been in Portland for some time receiving medical treatment, has been home for a few days' visit. During his stay here, he and Mrs. Drexler very pleasantly entertained the Crab club at a 7 o'clock dinner. On Sunday last, Mr. and Mrs. Drexler and P. J. Dickinson and wife motored to Portland, Mr. Drexler remaining for a time, the remainder of the party returning to Independence the same evening.
—In a recent letter from a California vineyard owner to friends in the city, the statement is made that prohibition, instead of decreasing the commercial value of the wine grapes of California, has had just the opposite effect. The fresh grapes are now carefully packed and shipped to foreign ports, the over ripe grapes, that have fallen from the stem and partially dried, are gathered and made into jam. Many of these vineyards are bringing in annual returns of $500 an acre.
—Frank Hennigan, the chicken man, accompanied by his wife and daughter Ethel, motored to Willamina for the day Sunday, and as a result the 1000 or more chickens on the ranch failed to get their evening meal on schedule time. Mr. Hennigan had three blowouts on the return trip, the first two he didn't mind in the least, but when he bought a new tire and that blew out, he felt that it surely was his hoodoo day. The family came home in the wee sma' hours and the chickens had an extra feed in the morning.
