It is a matter of current comment that the Pacific coast ships carload after carload of fruit East to be made into choice jellies and other confections and then reshipped and sold to the people of this coast at fancy prices. Any country that ships its raw material thousands of miles and then buys the product of that material after it has passed through the cunning hands of the manufacturer will always complain of hard times. Oregon and California raise incomparable crops of delicious fruits each year and there is no reason why we should not have local manufacturers to supply the home market with the table delicacies manufactured from these fruits. If Eastern capital can pay freight on the raw material across the continent, and manufacture it into preserves, jellies and such like and sell at a profit to the Pacific coast consumers surely local capital here could realize a handsome profit by engaging in the business. We even ship some of our fruits to England, notably the California apricot where it is manufactured into marmalade and shipped back to this coast to be consumed. The Pacific Coast is almost prodigal in its production of the raw material of commerce, but our people will never prosper as they should, will never secure the full returns of their industry until they become manufacturers as well as producers.

The Valley Transcript says "one of the best crops this year is the crop of graduates. Hard times, it is pleasant to know have not diminished that crop." While it is pleasant to know that the crop of graduates has not diminished, yet one cannot help thinking how different the actual world of affairs to that ideal world which fills the romantic vision of the young graduate with wild dreams of improbable achievements. When the college graduate first steps out upon the stage of action he is confident that "the world is his oyster," but a few frisky turns around the rough corners in life's daily struggle for bread soon convinces him that the tough old oyster is hard to open. He finds however that his school training is helpful and beneficial; it quickens his perceptions, disciplines his intellect, gives him a ready grasp of affairs, renders him competent to fill the higher stations in life, makes him ready and resourceful, quick to learn and quick to act. Other things being equal he passes beyond and out of sight of his uneducated competitors because he has been specially trained for the great struggle in which he is engaged. But after all, the world of affairs is the great training school, and if the young graduate is not forgetful of his first preliminary lessons in college he will become a useful member of society and a factor in the onward march of the world.

Mr. Henry Clews, a leading New York banker and financier, confidently predicts that the "coming ten years may be expected to surpass everything in the world's experience in the way of industrial progress and commercial expansion." It is difficult to understand where Mr. Clews finds evidence of his optimistic prediction. That the next decade may be one of "industrial progress and commercial expansion" is quite probable, but to say that it will be the greatest in "the world's experience" is making a very large claim. There is unmistakable evidence that a revival or business is near at hand, but it is improbable that every line of trade will be rejuvenated into active life. The change will be rapid in some lines and slow in others, every branch of industry cannot move forward at once. However, the signs of the times are propitious and there is every reason to feel encouraged.

Our esteemed contemporary, the Portland Sun, closes a justly eulogistic editorial on the late Professor Huxley with the following remark: "It has been often alleged that Huxley was an agnostic of the Bob Ingersoll school, but he does not seem to have ever admitted or contradicted the charge." There is no reason why he should have "either admitted or contradicted the charge." Mr. Huxley was a student of science and philosophy. He took very little interest in purely theological disquisition, although early in life he formulated a creed of his own and labeled himself an agnostic. Prof. Huxley was no more a follower of Robert Ingersoll than Bishop Simpson was a follower of Sam Jones.

It is now clearly evident that Russia intends to push her aggressive in the East until she obtains an ice-free port on the Yellow Sea, but how she will manage to do this without coming in conflict with plucky little Japan is not so clear. But an ice-free port Russia means to have, either through her ballyhoo methods of diplomacy or the terrible ordeal of war. Japan is reluctant to fight her big antagonist, but fight she must or lose all of her political influence on the continent of Asia. Peace between the two nations is so strained that the slightest overt act on the part of either will cause the fierce dogs of war to again be turned loose in the Orient.

In the death of Professor Huxley science has lost one of her ablest students, and most competent and exact teachers. His researches in the field of biological study constitute the most enduring monument to his fame, and his brilliant presentation of truth as he found it in nature has endeared his memory to half the civilized world. In some respects he was the most brilliant thinker among the distinguished group of scientific men of his day. Mr. Huxley was also noted for his vigorous and epigrammatic use of the English language. The freedom of scientific thought had no stouter champion than Thomas H. Huxley.

The business outlook for Independence is brightening, and there is accumulative evidence each week that every branch of business and trade will be materially strengthened by fall. The change is coming on gradually, there is no sporadic movement in any one line, but continuous increase in the volume of trade all around. Independence has never been a boom town, its growth has been normal and healthy, and for this reason it is among the first towns in the valley to feel the quickening impulse of the rising tide of prosperity.

The debate between William H. Harvey, author of "Coin's Financial School," and Hon. Roswell G. Horr, financial and tariff editor of the N. Y. Tribune, will begin in Chicago, July 16, and continue from day to day until finished. The hands of each disputant will be held up by an able corps of assistants, so a gaping and gullible public won't know whether it is Messrs. Harvey and Horr, or the distinguished coteries of learned gentlemen back of them who are furnishing the "ground lightning" that will illuminate the silver question.

The Salem Statesman very appropriately and justly remarks: "The Oregon law suspending fishing in the Columbia river on Sunday is not for the moral benefit of the fishermen. It is to give the fish a rest on that day. It ought to be and will be enforced clear across the river."

Council Proceedings.
City council convened in regular session July 2, 1896. In absence of Mayor Hurley, council was called to order by President Councilman Cook. Members present: Cook, Clodfelter, Finch, Strong and Walker. Absent: Percival. Minutes of previous meeting were read and approved. An ordinance passed entitled "an ordinance to provide for extinguishment of fires etc., and to provide for and create a fire department within the limits of the city of Independence etc." Also an ordinance passed entitled "an ordinance to protect the property of the Independence Water Company and to punish persons interfering with the same." The saloon bonds of J. R. Cooper, Layton Smith, Owens & Gaither approved and license ordered issued thereof. The sum of $9 refunded to Chas. Durrell on sale of horse and warrant for same ordered drawn in favor of Peter Cook. Bills against town ordered paid as follows: Doughty & Locke, $1.40; W. H. Kelley, $2; J. W. Richardson, Jr., $7.50; Peter Cook, $9; J. T. Ford, $1.20; J. W. Fetzer, $30; A. J. Tupper, $40.35; L. C. Gilmore, $50; Electric Light Co., $85.25.

Polk County Teachers' Institute.
The annual teachers institute for Polk county was held in the Normal school building at Monmouth, June 24, 25, and 26. It was well attended, there being 95 teachers enrolled, and each day a number of visitors were present. A very interesting and profitable time was enjoyed by all.

The instructors were as follows: Supt. J. H. Ackerman, of Multnomah county, who presented the following subjects in a very able manner: Arithmetic, Spelling, Language, and Theory and Practice of Teaching. Prof. Buckham, of the Normal School, who handled the subject of Psychology in such a manner that the teachers could not fail to be greatly benefited. Prof. E. E. Balcomb, of the Normal School, who presented the important and least generally known points of Physiology in a live and interesting way, a dissection before the class being one feature of the work. Miss Edith Cassavant, of the Normal School, presented Geography and Reading, bringing into prominence the points on which many teachers are weak, an important one of which is "thought-getting." The instructors are all experienced teachers and the work done ought to be very helpful to the teachers attending.

Two evening sessions were held, the first consisted of an Address of Welcome by Pres. Campbell of the Normal School, a response by Supt. Ackerman, and short addresses by others. The second consisted of a lecture on "The History of Literature," by Hon. E. Hofer, of Salem, which was very interesting and was well received, supplemented by two quartets, a solo by Miss Longacre, an essay by Mr. Freeman and a recitation by Mrs. Balcomb, which were all of a high order.

Every session of the institute was highly profitable and we feel that the teachers will go to their homes encouraged and filled with an enthusiasm that will enable them to do better work than ever before. This institute was on the whole, one of the most successful ever held in Polk County.

You Think It Is Something Else.

The "why" of the bad feeling is what puzzles you. It is easy to imagine so many causes, when the real one is indigestion. You think it's something else. The cure is Ripans Tablets. A single one gives relief. Ask your druggist.

Weekly Crop Bulletin.

The warm weather caused a very rapid growth and development in all vegetation. The weather was exceedingly favorable to haying; the clover and alfalfa have all been cut and put away; the timothy and cheat will be cut during the next ten days. Fully the largest hay crop ever cut in Oregon will be cut this year.

The grain crops are in fine condition. Spring grain, would of course, be benefitted by rain, but the absence of rain will do no material injury. Fall sown wheat and oats have headed, and bear promise of heavy yields. In Jackson county the grain crop promises well, though it appears to be poorer in that country than any other, this fact being due to the absence of rain. Jackson county is a fruit county, and but little more grain than what is required for home consumption is grown.

Corn is thriving and growing rapidly; this crop, though small, would be very materially benefitted by rain; it needs rain more than anything else.

Early cherries have been marketed, and the later cherries are now coming in. Rain would seriously injure the cherry crop at the present time. The first cherries were a very heavy crop, and those now coming in will yield unusually well—but then, cherries always yield well in Oregon.

Blackberries and raspberries are ripe. There is possibly no more prolific article of food grown in Oregon than these berries. They always do well; no matter what the climatic conditions may be, the berry crop is always large.

Hops continues their vigorous growth. Lice are found in all yards. The major portion of the growers are spraying to check the ravages of lice, though some few are not spraying, claiming that the low price will not warrant the labor and expense. The lice do not appear to be as plentiful as is usual at this season of the year.

The fruit outlook continues to be encouraging. The apple, pear, plum and prune trees are filled, as well. There are fewer insects this year than formerly, and where they do appear greater efforts are made to eradicate them than ever before. The fruit crop is beyond the period of damage from climatic conditions, hence it can quite safely be assumed that a successful fruit season is assured. Potatoes and vegetation of all kinds promise very large returns.

The encouraging and hopeful view taken by the correspondents of the year crop continues to prevail, and unless some phenomenal occurrence should prevail a bounteous harvest of all products will be secured.

The climatic conditions today are such that for Western Oregon no rain is probable this week. That the temperature will increase from Wednesday, and warm weather prevail the remainder of the week. Another cool period will most likely occur from next Sunday.

Weather Forecasts.

Foster's last bulletin gave forecasts of the storm wave to cross the continent from June 30 to July 4th, and the next one he says will reach the Pacific coast about July 5th, cross the west of Rockies country by close of the 6th, the great central valleys 7th to 9th and Eastern states about the 10th.

Accompanying this disturbance a very considerable amount of rain will fall from Kansas and Nebraska along the fortieth parallel to New York and the New England states and following this disturbance the weather will be very cool for the time of year.

In connection with this storm wave the warm wave will cross the west of Rockies country about July 5, great central valleys 7th to 9th, and Eastern states about the 9th. The cool wave will cross the west of Rockies country about the 8th, great central valleys 10th and Eastern states 11th.

The third disturbance of July will reach the Pacific Coast about July 11th, cross the west of Rockies country by close of 12th, the great central valleys 13th to 15th and the Eastern states 16th.

Rains from this disturbance will be about the same and in same parts of the United States as mentioned for the storm wave of the 6th to 10th, and following the storm the temperature will be lower than usual.

The warm wave connected with this last disturbance will cross the west of the Rockies country about the 11th, great central valleys 13th and the Eastern states 15. The cool wave will cross the west of Rockies country about 14th, great central valleys 16th and Eastern states 18th.

B. F. Mulkey, E. A. Thorp and J. Coats, of Monmouth, have gone to Coles, Cal., a mining district in the Siskiyou mountains. They will probably be absent during the summer.

Fluttering, No Appetite, Could Not Sleep, Wind on Stomach.

"For a long time I had a terrible pain at my heart, which fluttered almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. There was a feeling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I could not sweep a room without resting. My husband induced me to try
