The recorder's court criminal docket was unusually large last month, but it is to the credit of Independence that only two persons arraigned were residents of the city. Of course, during the hop picking season all classes of people congregate here, and unfortunately many worthless white men and in fortunate Indians will imbibe more "tarantula juice" than they can comfortably carry. Now that the hop picking season is practically ended this lawless element will "fold its tents and silently steal away."

Saturday was one of the busiest days Independence has seen in a long while. The streets were lined with vehicles and the sidewalks thronged with people. The merchants did a thriving trade and everybody appeared in a good humor. There are plenty of good towns in the valley but none better than Independence.

Henry Walker, who resides 25 miles east of Eugene, met with a serious, if not fatal, accident last Saturday morning. He had been in town drinking all night, and was trying to make his way to the river bottom near town, where his family was camping. He was just crossing the Southern Pacific track when the 3:05 California express came along, and he was struck by the engine and knocked from the track, receiving a broken arm, two ribs, a severe wound on the head, and internal injuries.
