UNREASONABLE HOPES.

The Useful, the Beautiful and the Ideal Should be the aim and Purpose of Life.

FEW SUPPLEMENTAL THOUGHTS,

In our last we spoke of unreasonable hopes and disappointments resulting therefrom, we will give a continuation in the same line of thought.

One man hopes to become a true artist. He has within himthat which he longs to express in his picture.his statue or his writings, and he also hopes that wealth may crown his efforts, but experience shows him these two good things seldom lie in the same path; that they demand different qualities and abilities; that if he would reach to the heights in one, he must be content to dwell in the realms of the other, If, then, it is more to him to be what he longs to be than to have what he would like to have, what reasons has the loyal and devoted artist to complain, though he be poor and even obscure. He posesses that which he most deeply values? Why should he hope for other things which are inconsistent with that? Another prizes highly his independence. He does not wish to be bound by the conventionalities of society, and he consults his health, his comfort or his conveniences rather than the laws of fashion or the strict rules of etiquette. Yet when society looks coldly or smiles contemptuously upon him he is filled with wrath and surprise. He had not counted the cost nor prepared for the necessary sacrifice.

A statesman is inspired with the hope of benefiting his country, and he sees one way at least in which he ardently aspires to accompolish it. But he also hopes that, in carrying his measure, he may win esteem and popularity. If, however, he finds himself in th. minority, and contravened by po litical schemers and office seekers does he faint with discouragement? Would he then exchange his ear nest patriotism and disinterested And, if not, should he not be content and glad to work on in the same good cause, even in the face of opposition? We do a kindness for a friend or neighbor, or relieve poverty, or solace distress, and are not content with the blessed results in themselves. We crave appreciation and gratitude as well, and are often bitterly disappointed when it does not come. Marcus Antonius says, Some men when they do you a kindness are presently for ringing the obligation in your ears. Others remember the favor and look upon you as their debtor. A third sort shall be every jot as much benefactors, and yet scarce known anything of the matter. These are much like a vine, which is satisfied by being fruitful in its kind, and bears a bunch of grapes without expecting any thanks for it." Thine action, thine action alone determine thy worth.

Man She Would Marry,

"I never heard a young girl say, From B. F. Smith we learn that as young girls are fond of saying. the New York Sun, "what sort of a man she will marry, and what sort only, that I do not think of certain speeches to which I, myself, have listened from pretty lips before this. A school friend of mine so held New Jersey in detestation that she tore its map from her geography. She used to say nothing would induce her to marry a man who was a widower, or wore The attendance at the public a wig, or who lived in New Jersey. guilty of all these three enormities. two cousins. I would not marry a not think of a clergyman, or Carrie of a farmer. And we married, respectively, a business man, a clergysmart young American 'help' in wont to declaim to us children on the scorn in which she held all men, always winding up her denunciation of the sex by: 'No, I would'nt marry any man that walks on two legs.' And she didn't. She married a one-legged
