Unhappy Wives And Husbands

Salem Statesman.

An English paper several years ago stated that in the year 1854 there were in London 1132 runaway wives, 2348 runaway husbands; 4175 married people legally divorced, 17,245 living in open warfare; 13,270 living in private misunderstandings, 55,340 living in mutual indifference; while only 3473 were regarded as happy; 427 nearly happy, and 12 perfectly happy.

An American philosopher, after studying the facts and circumstances of the cases, has come to the conclusion that all this discord in families is the offspring of disease in some form or another, and that in a great majority of cases diseases may be entirely removed and husbands and wives made entirely happy. It has been done in innumerable instances, and what has been done heretofore may be repeated hereafter.

The following are a few cases where whole families have been made perfectly happy by removal of the diseases which produced discord.
