A Joke On Ernest Cole.

From the seraphic look in his eyes no one would imagine Ernest Cole to be guilty of deceit, but he is.

It happened this week, a trusting female in Buena Vista sent to the store for a spool of No. 40 white thread.

"We're out of 40, won't 36 do?" questioned the debonair young merchant to which a doubtful reply was given by the customer. "Never mind," said Cole. "I'll fix it so she'll never know the difference," and with a knife he carefully scraped the papers from the spool ends. The trick might have worked had not the purchaser told the lady. This is one on Cole.

Another Landmark Gone.

Another old land mark has disappeared from Buena Vista, during the past two weeks. It is the old blacksmith shop vacated this spring by T. P. Ogleby. The material is to be used by Rus Liggett in the construction of a house on his place just over the river, where his dwelling was destroyed by fire a few months ago.

Thirty-six years ago the old shop just torn down was a flourishing drug store, where Dr. W. C. Lee sold pills and plasters to the ailing public. Dr. Lee was the father of Mrs. Sarah Baldwin and Miss Mattie Lee, both of whom are present residents of Buena Vista. He sleeps in a Lane county cemetery and those who knew him the old store will miss the mark that has just gone from midst.
