In the awful Heppner catastrophe the lives of a few relatives of Independence people were lost. It seems certain that Mrs. Hodgkin, for years a resident of this place, was caught in the flood. She is among the missing. A Mr. Jones and family, relatives of the Jones here, were drowned, and Y. A. Gray left Monday evening for Heppner in response to a telegram announcing death of an uncle and family. In a moment of such awful suffering, public sentiment quickly responds, and it is earnestly solicited that a good attendance of citizens be present at the mass meeting this evening, of which announcement appears in another column.
