IMPORTANT NEWSPAPER CHANGE.

Henry Watterson's Courier-Journal Announces a New Policy.

During three decades the Louisville Courier-Journal has stood unalterably and conspicuously before the public as the representative of the great commonality of the people against both the Robber Baron, seeking through the accretion of ill-got money to steal away the people's liberty by stealing away their franchise rights, and ready tool of the Robber Baron, the bandit politician, masquerading as a statesman and a patriot, the better to serve the robber master. In fulfilling this function it has sometimes gone fast and sometimes to the wall, and sometimes to cry "halt!" and sometimes to cry "halt!" times to drive at the root of the matter and sometimes to drive about never changing the direction of movement and always true to the underlying principle of its policy expressed by the simple motto for "the greatest good to the greatest number."

With the advent of the Year, that is on the first of July, 1903, the Courier-Journal began a campaign from which it expected for commanding results, better to reach the object before it, the twice-a-week edition, returning to the oldly Courier-Journal, which is a quarter of a century was a political bible to millions of Americans who knew they could both its prescience and its interestedness.

The new Weekly Courier-Journal is modern in every respect, is a paper for the home, issued every Wednesday and filled with the best work of the best writers. The price of the paper is $1 a year in advance, it is well worth it.

By a special arrangement the publishers of the Courier-Journal you can get that paper for ENTERPRISE one year for
