Miss Ketchum.

The following complimentary notice of Miss Kathleen Ketchum, daughter of Dr. E. L. Ketchum of this city and now attending college at Mt. Angel appeared in Sunday's Oregonian:

Miss Kathleen Ketchum, of Mt. Angel Academy and College, was informed by Superintendent J. H. Ackerman, that, in the February examinations of teachers for state papers, she more than attained the required general average for a teacher's state certificate and that the same will be forwarded to her as soon as she has obtained the required amount of experience in teaching. Miss Ketchum is now gaining this experience by teaching in the training school of Mt. Angel Academy and College with the Benedictine Sisters as critic teachers.

"By June Miss Ketchum will have undergone the necessary training and will then receive her state certificate authorizing her to teach in any public school in Oregon for a period of five years without further examination."

Saved By Martin.

Albert Martin tried and acquitted in the United States court at Portland last winter, on the charge of killing U.S. Grant, last week saved the life of a man on the Siletz reservation, by a heroic deed.

Warren Hall is the man that owes his life to Martin. Mr. Hall in company with a Mr. Mosier were floating down the Siletz river in a boat. They struck a wire cable stretched across the river and the boat capsize. Both seized the cable and Mosier managed to get to shore. Being a large man Mosier's weight pulled the cable seven and eight feet under the water and Hall held on to it until filled with water almost beyond recovery. Martin, seeing the dilemma, sprang into the river and swam to Hall's rescue. Mr. Hall was more dead than alive when Martin brought him ashore. Though his limbs were stiff and flesh turning black, he was rolled and worked with until restored.

STORY OF DAMON AND PYTHIAS

The reign of Dionysius, the elder, marked an era of selfishness in the world's history. Following the example of the tyrant, his adherents in the Isle of Sicily tried in obliterating from the tablets of their memory every vestige of that noblest principle of manhood which recognizes man's fealty to his fellow.

Damon, a Senator of Syracuse, by his opposition to Dionysius in his attempted usurpation of power, was placed under sentence of immediate death.

Pythias, the time-tried friend of Damon, besought the tyrant to grant him a respite that he might bid a last farewell to those he loved. The denial of his request was followed by the most striking exemplification of pure friendship that has ever illumined the pages of history. Pythias, who well knew the honor of his friend, offered himself as a pledge for Damon's return, agreeing to pay the penalty with his own life should Damon prove false. Dionysius accepted the proffered hostage and placed Pythias in darkness and in chains, while his friend of years hastened to the home where loved ones dwelt.

His earthly affairs are speedily arranged, the last fond embrace is given, he takes the last look upon his friends, now frantic with grief, and starts to return, but finds that his slave has slain his steed. Syracuse was leagues away, he saw his day of respite fading into night, his friend led to the scaffold; he heard his pledge of honor, the cry of mockery without the prison walls.

Crazed at the thought of honor lost, friend and friendship sacrificed, he seized a passing steed, and, swifter than the wind of heaven, flew on toward Syracuse and certain death. Aye, more; to the rescue of his friend and the maintenance of his honor, to him sweeter than life and home. As the last moment is called and the executioner's ax is uplifted over the head of Pythias, he rushes through the gates, springs upon the scaffold, redeems his honor and the life of his friend.

This display of manhood and true courage led captive the tyrant's heart, who, remitting the death sentence of Damon, sought admission to their friendship.
