The Duke of Wellington, according to G. R. Gleig's reminiscences, was ignorant of most things and seemed in-capable of learning. Once, for instance, he asked Arbuthnot how turnips propa-gated, whether by seed or by cuttings like potatoes. But he was a scout! Once upon a time he and Croker beguiled a drive by guessing the nature of the country beyond the bills which they mounted. The duke's guesses were always correct, and Croker at last asked the reason. "The reason?" replied the duke. "Why, what have I been doing the greater part of my life ex-cept that which we are doing now-trying to make out from what I saw the shape of the country which I could not see?"

Great Sunken Lake. In the Cascade mountains, about seventy-five miles east of Jacksonville Ore., the seeker of the curious will find the Great Sunken lake, the deepest lake in the world, so far as its situation is concerned, for it is said to average 2,000 feet down to the water on all sides. The depth of the water is unknown, and its surface is smooth and unruffled by the strongest winds. It is about fifteen miles in length and four and one-half wide. For unknown ages it has lain still, silent and mysterious in the bosom of the great mountain range, as though scooped out by the hand of a giant genle.

It is said that a female fly may have 25,000,000 descendants during a single summer and still have plenty of time to fall into the cream pitcher and harrow up the feelings of the baldheaded.

Among the immigrants landing at New York recently was one by the rather bibulous name of Boozena Sokup. Not all of them carry the label.
