The Salem Statesman observes the Russo-Japanese war is hurting the flour trade of Salem as the mill at the Capital City cannot export to either of these oriental countries now. But when the war is over, predicts the Statesman, this section of country will raise more wheat and Salem's flouring mills will be kept going. The Statesman's prophet is certainly not keeping very closely in touch with the trend of events. The Willamette valley will not raise more wheat. It would be more nearly correct to say it will raise less. Dairying, fruit and stock raising and diversified farming are taking the place of wheat raising in the Willamette valley. Dairying especially, is growing at a rapid rate in this valley and as dairying, hop growing and other industries increase, wheat raising decreases. It is better so. In diversified farming lies the future greatness of this valley. It is not in wheat raising. Nature intended the plateaus of eastern Oregon, Washington and Idaho for wheat raising, and the Willamette valley and but few other sections can compete with them in the production of wheat. Nature likewise intended the Willamette valley for diversified farming and few other localities, the world over can compete with it. As to wheat raising, that industry has seen its best days in this valley. Farmers have learned that it does not pay to wear the land out trying to raise wheat in competition with the country east of the Cascade mountains. The future picture of the Willamette valley is more correctly described as one great dairy farm rather than as an endless wheat field.

Independence was honored Sunday with a visit from Dr. E. P. Hill, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Portland. Dr. Hill is one of the ablest men in the ministry of Oregon. He delivered a sermon in the opera house Sunday evening and the hall was packed to its limit. The audience was deeply impressed with the discourse a number signifying their intention to lead purer lives. Dr. Hill's sermon was a fitting climax to the series of revival meetings that are being conducted here. Rev. Snyder, assisted by Mr. Soper, is continuing the meetings this week. These meetings are a part of a general program which contemplates simultaneous meetings all over the state to wind up with a general crusade in Portland on the 22nd of March. The meetings here are being successfully conducted.

A race course and riding club are matters to consider before the flowers bloom again.

The telephone corporations are getting busy around Independence. The more miles of wire stretched and connections made the better people will like them.
