It will be remembered that Mr. Mieshaber "went into coals" while waiting for something to turn up. If a billion dollar trust is really being formed to control the price of coal, something is likely to turn up sure enough.

Unless Constitutional Democracy in Russia meets with a holdup country delegates to the douma will soon insist on being introduced to Mrs. Czar, kissing the baby and staying to dinner.

A rare volume of Poe's recently sold for $1,500, which shows that the country is in no hurry to drop him because he was turned down without regrets by the New York Hall of Fame.

The Douma's Land Programme.

When the czar's spokesman before the douma, in answer to the demands of the Constitutional Democrats, described their programme for land distribution as a sweeping denial of the right of private ownership not only of land, but of every other kind of property, he was guilty of misconception and calumny. The out and out socialists have some power in Russia and are not without voice in the national assembly. But as a matter of fact the land programme framed by the Constitutional Democrats to meet the needs of the peasants, which Premier Goremykin seems to have confused with that of the Social Democrats—who have been promising everything in sight to the ignorant mullus—goes no further in the way of confiscation than does the Wyndham land purchase act now working in Ireland. It is a logical conclusion to the peasant emancipation and amelioration begun by Alexander II, and merely aims to extend the application of the measures of relief instituted by the murdered czar.

It is not proposed by the ruling element in the douma to confiscate, but to lease crown and other lands. In their address to the throne the representatives said, "Parliament would not be doing its duty if it did not make a law for the satisfaction of the needs of the suffering peasants by the aid of crown domains, monastic lands and the compulsory expropriation of land belonging to the owners of estates." The crown and church lands were to be leased and expropriation applied only to lands lying untilled or now leased for money or occupied by peasants who pay rental for it by work on the separate property of their landlords. Land so taken from the owners must be paid for very much as Lincoln proposed a compulsory sale to the nation for manumission of the slaves at the beginning of the war.

The douma's land programme especially exempts from expropriation private estates not exceeding in extent the limit fixed in any given district for peasant occupiers; also grazing lands belonging to villages, municipal lands and estates of zemstvos, educational and benevolent institutions. This plan would not make war upon individual ownership, as the premier charged, but would strengthen it by defining in law the principle and extent of individual ownership. The programme of the Russian socialists is sweeping and promises the peasants free land—that is, on paper, but the peasants themselves seem to consider it a wild scheme, impossible of realization. The truth is that the land programme of the douma seems to outside view highly conscientious and conservative instead of radical and sweeping. The land is there, and starving peasants need it. It is one thing to tell them to seize it and quite another thing for the government to acquire it and distribute it by due process of national law, having regard for the "greatest good of the greatest number."

Londoners are alarmed over the vibration caused by heavy street traffic above her subway system. Doubtless the big cities must face a new danger in their underground railways. Every one knows that a squad of soldiers or any body of marching men break step in crossing a bridge, no matter what its size and strength may be, for none could withstand the vibration of the concerted action. Even the tread of a dog may make a bridge shake because of the regularity of the vibration. Science assumes that the shock caused by moving trains may be absorbed and made harmless, but to what extent remains to be seen.

Atlanta is getting ready to have an exposition in 1910. As our world's fairs have followed the "course of empire" in a pretty straight line westward since 1876, beginning at Philadelphia and ending at Portland, it is about time to swerve southward and show that American civilization doesn't stick to one rut.

The international postal union has simplified the postage muddle by fixing the unit of weight for letters at one ounce for all countries, the same as it is in the United States. The additional postage has likewise been cut down from 5 to 3 cents for each ounce above the single rate.

The young king of Spain likes what the boys call a good time, and he will probably soon regard the throne as "in the way." There is nothing in the recent history of his country to glorify him, though Spain has improved in condition on account of the merited thrashing she has received.

The one objection to placing the picture of John Paul Jones on a postage stamp is the certainty of a revival of the old gag about that being the only possible way to lick him.

A genuine earthquake can make mischief for a sea level canal as easily as for a lock system. All canals look alike to Nature when she gets to tearing things.

With tin ore selling for $800 a ton at the mines it is all right to say that a person rolling in money "has got the tin."

Humble Pioneers.

When great calamities like the Baltimore fire, the Galveston tidal wave and the destruction of San Francisco sweep away palaces of wealth and the victims go to work to restore them and even to build better, we hear of the noble pioneer spirit of the American people. It is an honor to belong to the race with these heroic citizens and to dwell in the land where such things are not phenomenal, but come as a matter of course. But there are unheralded calamities all over this broad country every day that point the same moral.

Forest fires, tornadoes, cloud bursts and rain floods, to say nothing of innumerable fires which wipe out towns and villages, are constantly driving communities from their homes, leaving wrecks behind and bringing poverty to thousands who have only their bare hands with which to restore what they have lost. Capital is always ready to rebuild a city on an established commercial site. But the farmer has only his muscle to fall back on; the farm village must begin with shanties and struggle along for years until it reaches the painted cottage and brick store stage again. Here is where the American spirit is seen at its finest, the spirit, the indomitable pluck that nerved the early pioneers when they pushed from the coast through the wilderness barrier over the plains and across the Rockies. Their case is not so dramatic as when a city is razed in a night. Their sufferings are unseen, almost unnoted, by the world, and they struggle to their feet again uncheered except by their own courageous hopes.

A Bill to Abolish.

Some of the radical labor members of the British house of commons propose to abolish the house of lords just to get rid of the peers as an obstacle to labor legislation. This recalls Sandy's plan to "jostle abolish sin" when it was found that the existence of evil was a tough nut for theology to crack. Abolishing the house of lords is not, however, an original idea with the labor men. The commoners of England have often talked that way, but the upper chamber is there yet with power to obstruct legislation "of the people, by the people, for the people."

The particular act of the lords which raised the ire of the British workingmen was their refusal to bar foreign laborers from the English markets when there is a strike on. The laborites threatened to appeal to the country on this single issue unless the government should take action to oust the lords from power. It is not at all probable that the house of lords will ever be abolished at the hands of labor or any other factor in British politics. England would not be England without its lords any more than without its crown. So the labor men and all the commoners who stand for abolition on general principles must make the best of it and look upon the lords evil as the orthodox world does upon the mission of sin—something to keep good people busy.

Africa is a remarkable case in point where a land scramble did not lead to international war. Great Britain has secured perhaps the only share of the vast territory in which men of European descent could live and prosper. France about equals Great Britain in the area of her African possessions, but one-half of her territory lies in the great Sahara desert. Together these powers now control nearly two-thirds of Africa, and each of them alone controls more than any other two combined.

After a few samples of earthquake prediction by that new bureau of seismology the public will be in a mood to echo the sentiments of the alleged horse thief who was strung up a couple of times and then let go, "Might as well kill me as scare me to death."

It is refreshing to observe the manly and generous attitude of Nogi in defending Stoessel against the attacks of the bureaucrats of Russia. Nogi knows better than any one else that the Russians had to get out of Port Arthur, no matter who was in command.

Mr. Carnegie has arranged for the publication of a book on the Chinese language. If spelling reform is not part of the scheme at present it is bound to come, for knowing ones say that Chinese spelling is as twisted as the writing.

Perhaps the douma did not make it sufficiently plain to the czar that if he grants amnesty to the political prisoners the douma would arrange to secure amnesty for him.
