A Hint to Dramatists.

Discussing the making of plays, a writer in the Atlantic Monthly thinks that playwrights as a rule overlook the power and pathos of what he calls "the vacant room or the vacant stage." A deserted room and deserted stage are what the writer has in mind, as shown by his citing for example a finale in the play of "Shore Acres," which he redraws as follows:

After Nat Berry—played by Mr. Horns, the author—had scratched a bit of frost off the window pane to peer out into the night, locked the door and banked the fire he climbed with slow, aged footsteps up the stairs to bed. At the landing he turned to survey the old kitchen below, that lay so cozy and warm under the benediction of its eyes. Then he disappeared quite dim, save for the red glow from the fire. Yet the curtain did not fall, and through a mist of tears—tears it cleaned one's soul to shed—the audience looked for a long, hushed moment on the scene, on the new familiar room where so much of joy and grief had happened—deserted, tranquil, but suddenly, in this new light of emptiness, realized that these people who had made the play! It used to seem, indeed, as if the drama had not achieved full reality until the old kitchen had thus had its say, thus spoken the epilogue.

The cry of playwrights for action has led to an abhorrence by dramatists of many things that contribute to the vitality and illusion of a stage scene. In this particular case voices that are hushed are still eloquent, and actions that have had their brief strut and are dead linger with the spectator until the emotions evoked by their spell have yielded to the demands of reality. The deserted room speaks just as the picture of a departed friend speaks, to memory.

At Jamestown in 1907.

It was to be expected that the Jamestown exposition item in the congressional budget would get through at the last session because of the nature of it. The managers of the so called Jamestown exposition have shown no disposition to beg from the national treasury and have asked no national donations, loans or guarantees. The president formally invited the nations of the world to participate in a military celebration of the landing of the first European colony on American soil, and the response having been almost universal it rested with this nation to provide suitably for the visiting fleets and soldiers.

The funds of the government will be used to build wharfs, hospitals and barracks for the nation's guests, and much of the material used will be recovered by the government. Of course the pageantry which the act of congress assures will be pretty much "the whole show" at Jamestown, but the natural conditions are of a kind to attract crowds who would not go elsewhere to see the same features. Only a fraction of the great American mass have ever seen the Virginia shore, that shore which sent civilization west to the Mississippi and south to the gulf. With a magnificent background of river, lake and ocean, visitors to Jamestown next year will view a majestic pageantry of fleets and armies the like of which was never before offered to human gaze.

"Tinned chicken" the New York Tribune calls the packers' product. Now, the editor of the Tribune is at present American ambassador to England, and the connection of these two facts may be illustrated by the English way of "dishing" up an American joke in this line. Says an American, "We eat what we can, and what we can't we eat." An Englishman renders it, "We eat what we can, and what we can't we know." Perhaps Whitelaw Reid's pupils know only the London way of putting it.

And now bobs up the irrepressible scientist, one Professor Tyler this time, and declares that "much of our best philosophy has been taken from the clam." This would seem to take all the value out of the old time advice, "Don't be a clam."

Princess Eva's "stepping off" with King Alfonso left only four of the late Queen Victoria's twenty-one living granddaughters unmarried, a warning to eligible young men to speak quick or find themselves everlastingly too late.

Count Boni de Castellane has completed his probationary qualifications for full membership in the "Down and Out club," having been first bounced by his wife and then by the French chamber of deputies.

After all, San Francisco isn't cursed with all the evils of American life and some to boot. The citizens know not the autocratic ice man in summer or frozen water pipes in winter.

The civil service commission is looking for a competent man to count the government's money. Now, if it were only a job to spend its money the search needn't last long.

As the cables were careful to announce that "Princess Alice died with the Kaiser," the question arises as to whether Nick got in at the second table, or where was he?

John D. Rockefeller has bought a collection of fossils, but Ida M. Tarbell has just helped to buy a magazine in which she proposes to keep on considering live issues.

Taking the One Chance.

When President Garfield lay on what proved to be his deathbed he was told by the doctors that he had one chance in a thousand of pulling through. He said, "I'll take that one chance." Alas, it didn't save him, but many a soul pulls through this bitter life with only one chance at the start for success. Recently another blind girl has scored success in educating herself by sheer persistence in the single avenue left to her. With a sound brain in her blind head all was not lost. The career of Christine La Barraque, who, sightless from birth, has mastered four languages and music, is a lesson to people who complain that fortune has given them no chance to get on.

In this country there is always a chance to strike out at something. Many of the senators of the United States began life at the humblest employments open to poor lads—driving team, spreading hay, doing shop chores and selling papers. Garfield himself drove team on the towpath. Some boys are the better off for having no chance to drop into a place made for them. Most chances have their limitations. A boy cannot get very far who takes up with what comes as the gift of fortune. It is not necessary to stick to the towpath, the stable and the hayfield because one's lines are cast there at the beginning. These callings are only a chance to get acquainted with work, to measure one's capacity for usefulness. One chance of the kind is all a boy needs for success if he has the right stuff in him, and if he has not a thousand chances for preferment in the race for wealth and prominence wouldn't do him any good.

A Square Deal For the Horse.

Various humane societies in towns and cities are doing good work in checking cruel abuses of draft horses. Most large centers are comparatively free from flagrant offenses in the treatment of horses, such as whipping unmercifully and overloading. But there are cruelties sometimes due to thoughtlessness or ignorance, especially in the hot season. A farmer with a large load to haul to a distant market will start at daybreak or even before if he has moonlight or starlight and the roads are good. His horses will rest in the heat of the day or else make the horse trip with a light load.

In cities where the streets are well lighted it is possible to do most of the heavy hauling when there is no broiling sun to agonize the horses. This is the rule in many countries where the sun is fierce for all kinds of hauling. As an innovation here it would be attended with some inconvenience, but the horse will do more work in the long run if spared the torture of heat and flies. Fidelity to his master works hardship for the horse, and some day perhaps our dumb servants will be given a share at least of that thoughtful care now extended to them in heathen lands.

"Don't Give Up the Ship!"

It is a far cry in heroism of the deck from the brave Lawrence, who, dying, exclaimed, "Don't give up the ship!" to Rojostvensky sanctioning surrender to save human life. Lawrence went into the fight against odds; but, having given the signal to fight the British frigate Shannon "till she strikes or sinks," there was nothing for a hero to do but stay in the fight until laid out by the British fire. This Lawrence did. Although the Chesapeake finally surrendered to the Shannon, the act came after Lawrence and all his officers had fallen. It was up to Rojostvensky, entering the battle against Togo in the face of odds, to fight his men and ships to the death. Lawrence bequeathed to the American navy one of its noblest inspirations to valor, but Rojostvensky can live in history by comparison with Lawrence only as a mistake. Death in the Korean strait would have immortalized him.

The railway rate bill and general legislation for the control of corporations seem to have no terrors for the companies, judging by the extensive building of new trackage this year. The way things have been going it looks as though 1908 would make a good record at railroad building.

That newcomer from czarland who asked the court to change his name from John Tysackiewicz to plain John Tidd had his prayer answered instantaneously and unannounced, for no one could argue the case on its merits beyond pronouncing John T.

Says a foreign correspondent, "John D. Rockefeller is resting where Napoleon rested." We thought that was St. Helena and that Rockefeller was in Paris. Napoleon did not rest in France, but was thence wrested to St. Helena.

It had long been arranged in Berlin that in announcing the happy event expected at the palace seventy-two cannon shots would be fired for a girl and 101 for a boy. Is that the German idea of the percentages of relative value?

The cornerstones of a new village has been laid with great ceremony on Mount Vesuvius. And think of all the lovely land there is vacant over here in the United States!
