GOOD THOUGHTS.

It is well to be governed by our admirations rather than by our disgusts. To be in the iron grip of our dislikes is not a condition of peace. When governed by the ruling admirations of our lives, by the things we like, the people we love, the objects we worship, rather than by the things and people and objects we dislike, is one of the conditions of peace which is an inexhaustible fountain of daily help.

William Rader discusses this theme in the San Francisco Bulletin and his treatise is worth study.

Says Mr. Rader:

Disgusts breed fast. They are prolific. The habit of disgust is a growing habit. It creates kindred tendencies. Once contracted, the victim is never again satisfied with life and its possessions. He is discontented with himself, and finds life a burden. When a man thinks more often of his enemies than of his friends, of the vices than the virtues of humanity, and dwells more upon the swamps and quicksands under his feet than the stars and the clear blue above his head, then he is ruled by his disgusts rather than his admirations.

The reflex influence of our admirations upon our characters is a matter which all who would improve themselves should study.

Our disgusts mar the beauty of the soul. They penetrate deep into the nature, while the admiration of our reason and love touch the deeper notes because they reach down to the hidden heartstrings.

It is the soul of man which, with eyes thirsting for beauty, sees the beautiful and the good. Any sort of a man may show his utter, unintelligent hatred, his proud, impertinent and indiscriminating disgust, whereas it requires a soul, a mind, a true human to admire, to see and hear and know.

The disgusts which sweep over us, and which we learn to like, leave a sediment of poison in the life which is unwholesome and unhealthful. To learn to admire with sincerity is a path to enjoyment. To learn to be disgusted with the persons met, the music heard, art seen, books read, is to take upon ourselves the limitations of a bigot and the tribulations of one who has cultivated the habit of looking on the dark side of life. Disgust is often necessary. It acts as a corrective of extravagant hope and vain optimism. It has its place, but to be ruled by the negative thing and to suffer the nobler admirations of one's life to be shadowed by the feelings of antagonism against things is to follow a path leading into the fogs.

"Be glad of life because it gives you the chance to love, and to work, and to play," and to look up at the stars; be satisfied with your possessions, but not contented with yourself until you have made the best of them; despise nothing in the world except falsehood and meanness, and fear nothing except cowardice; be governed by your admirations rather than by your disgusts; covet nothing that is your neighbor's except his kindness of heart and gentleness of manners; think seldom of your enemies, often of your friends—these are little guide-posts to success.

Governor Chamberlain certainly has a right to irrigate. He has been made president of the National Irrigation Organization.

The Amity Enterprise would have H. Hirschberg a blooded high-roller and scatter $1000 in nickels among the youngsters if hops go to 25 cents.

The Independence National Bank was capitalized at $50,000. Every dollar of the capital stock has been paid back to the stockholders and the bank goes right on declaring dividends. That's the way investments in Independence pay.

The Albany Democrat wonders what will happen to Col. Hofer, editor of the Salem Journal, for publishing the false insinuation that the editor of the West Side Enterprise is married. Didn't the Democrat observe that Colonel Hofer's head went last week as president of the Willamette Valley Development League? Watch him lose his job as editor of the Salem paper next.

Ladies skip this paragraph. It got into type by mistake. The printer was requested to destroy it but failed to do so:

If she had to stand on her head, I knew she'd get at it somehow. This poem she's already read. Now I wager ten cents to a dollar, she gets the least kind of a howl, but you bet she'll find it out any day.

It's something she ought not to know. If there's anything that worries a woman, it's the least kind of a howl, but you bet she'll find it out any day.

He Won

In an assemblage of countrymen at a wayside inn in England the conversation turned on the subject of eating, and several of the company named their favorite dishes and told how much they could eat of them if they were hungry.

Just then one of the waiters brought in a lot of sprats (a species of small fish very popular in England), whereupon one man remarked boastfully, "My partner and I can eat a bushel of them."

The statement was naturally received with incredulity, but he offered to make it the subject of a wager.

His offer accepted, a bushel of sprats was brought in and the man ate his fill of them.

"Now," said the boaster, "I will bring in my partner," and he called in an old sow.
