—The White House has thirty-one rooms.

—Never expose your disappointments to the world.

—To recognize merit, a man must first have it.

—Said D. Jerrold, I knew a man who could speak five-and-twenty languages and he never said anything worth hearing in any of them. Yes, and that fellow is not alone.

Grandpa—"Now, Tommy, can you tell me where port comes from?" Tommy—"No, sir; but I know where it goes." The question was not pressed.

—Let your thoughts be those that lead upward and forward; tutor the mind to constant aiming and self-improvement. You will never be lonely, neither have time to be lured by a thousand snares, seemingly set for the weak and yielding.

—A remark of an old minister is commended to all preachers who are tempted to complain of a small congregation. "It is as large a congregation, perhaps, as you will want to account for at the day of Judgment."

—I'd stay an old maid till I got black in the face, before I'd marry a man who chews tobacco. And she took a wad of gum out of her mouth and stuck it on the under-side of her chair while she was eating supper. "Law, law, what a pity!" Girls, don't chew gum, don't.

—The bathing suit worn by the boys along the river front fits well and is very simple and inexpensive. It consists of a wad of cotton in each ear.

—Old parson (who had once been curate of the parish): "How do you manage to get on in these bad times, Mr. Johnson?" Farmer: "Well, sir, about as bad as can be. Last year we lived on faith; this year we're a livin' on hope; and next year I'm afraid we shall have to depend on charity."

—The Thracians wept when a child was born, and feasted when a man went out of the world; and with reason. Death opens the gate of fame and shuts the gate of envy after it; it unlooses the chain of the captive and puts the bondsman's task into another man's hand.—Sterne.

—Reading, writing and arithmetic, are merely the means of acquiring knowledge; and one of the great causes why the schooling that has been so unproductive of improvement in their condition, is that it has consisted chiefly of words and not of things.

September smiles divine
On hill and lawn,
And eke the straw-hat line
Is drawn.

—Olive Logan, in a Paris letter to the Cincinnati Enquirer, says of the French capital: "It is the most beautiful capital the hands of man have ever reared. It is the wickedest city that exists on the face of the earth. It is a lovely place to visit, either for a week or a twelvemonth. It is the cruelest spot in the world to pass a lifetime in."

"Two went to pray! O, rather say,
One went to brag, the other to pray.
One stands up close, and treads on high,
Where the other dares not lend his eye.
One nearer to God's altar trod,
The other to the altar's God."

—With William Black, the novelist, the writing of stories is a business. He is shrewd, practical and quick. He has a beautiful house at Brighton, which overlooks the ocean, and makes about $25,000 a year from his writings. Black was born in Glasgow, and is in his fortieth year. He went to no college, and his journalistic work was on the London News.

—A lawyer and a preacher were discussing the direction of the wind. The former said: "We go by the courthouse vane." And we go by the church vane," replied the parson. "In the matter of wind that is the best authority," said the lawyer. And the preacher went home to cogitate.

Let Them Alone.

Young girls in most households, are too closely watched; they are allowed no time to think and become acquainted with the resources of their own minds. From babyhood they are watched, tended, noticed, guarded, never let alone. Even young infants are not so much as permitted to think out the mysteries of a door-knob, but are tossed up; their little trains of thought interrupted, their solitude continually invaded. Let a little girl be left to herself hours of every day, near to loving friends who have some other occupation than watching and advising her, and she will invent boundless resources and be never so happy. Solitude is a necessity to the formation of character. And yet this is a privilege seldom enjoyed by children. If they are not mingling in the exciting labors or sports of the crowded schools, they are playing in the streets, or with their mates in their own homes; some social diversion fills up nearly all the leisure hours of every day; and when there are no playmates at hand the mother must give up her time to their amusement. Too much company, too much watching, too much effort to direct every thought and action of the child, too little opportunity for the development of its own individuality—doubtless these are the reasons for the feebleness of many characters. Country children are better off than city children in this respect. They have much time to themselves; and while their minds often lack the alertness that is produced by the brisk social commerce of the cities, it is impossible that they sometimes gain a power of concentration more than they lose nimbleness or wit. The fact is that the majority of the men and women who are at the head of affairs in the nation were trained in the country, and while their success is largely due to the fact that they learned to work in their youth, it is due in part, no doubt, to the fact that they had in their younger days a good deal of time to think.—Waverley Magazine.

The Escorial.

The Escorial is the palace of the kings of Spain, one of the largest and most magnificent in the world. It was begun by Philip II. in the year 1562, and the first cost of its erection was 6,000,000 ducats. It forms a vast square of polished stone, paved with marble. It may give some notion of the surrounding grandeur of this palace to say that according to the computation of Francisco de los Santos, it would take more than four days to go through all the rooms and apartments the length of the way being reckoned thirty-three Spanish leagues, which is about one hundred and twenty English miles. There are fourteen thousand doors and eleven thousand windows belonging to the edifice.—The Examiner.

—Don't pray at people; scolding isn't praying, and it never does less good than when it is foisted into a prayer, and the scolded think you are telling the Lord that about them which you do not dare to say to their faces. Don't talk with the Lord as you would chat with your neighbor; true prayer is reverent. Don't ramble all over the universe; you'll not get back in time. Don't try to get everything into one prayer; you will most likely have another chance. Don't pray so long as to tire all the hearers; that isn't the meaning of the command to "pray always," and to "pray without ceasing;" you can safely leave some petitions to be offered when you are alone in your closet. Don't pray in public, if you are prayerless in secret; such prayer prevails neither with God nor man. Pray "in the Holy Ghost."—Congregationalist.

Compulsory Savings.

The plan of compelling laborers of all classes to lay by enough of their earnings to provide for sickness and old age has of late been advocated with considerable earnestness by certain English writers who urge that such savings be kept and accumulated for them by the government. It is a scheme almost visibly related to that of compulsory education. It might do as a protective proposition in which property is taxed, as in England and under the provisions of a poor law—the argument being, that unless the workmen are forced to save something for themselves while they are able, the poor rates may swallow up all taxable property in the end. But in a country like France, much more in one like the United States, where there is no poor law, but the helpless poor are supported by general forms of charity, such a scheme would not appeal with any force whatever to the rich and well-to-do, since they have no desire to be relieved from poor rates. Besides, no law that could possibly be exacted would make the French people more frugal and thrifty than they are now. They are saving by habit, which has become a second nature and thrifty has become a national trait. Would that as much could be said for the American people. For all that, a plan has been recently brought forward in the French Chamber of Deputies, which not only compels workmen to set aside a certain portion of their present earnings but also compels employers and the government together to contribute as much as the workmen themselves.—Mass. Ploughman.

SETTLING COFFEE.—After using the white of an egg to settle coffee, one is frequently puzzled to dispose of the yolk. If it is beaten and stirred into the milk designed for the coffee, it will so closely resemble cream that few will notice the difference. I seldom use anything beside cold water to settle my coffee. I cover the coffee with cold water and place where it will readily boil; then fill the pot with boiling water and set where it will merely simmer. Just before bringing to the table I add half a cupful of cold water, which settles it nicely.

—Ruskin says that many people read the Scriptures as the hedgehog gets grapes. The old monks said that this animal rolled over among the grapes and carried off what happened to stick to its spines. "So your hedgehoggy readers roll themselves over and over in their Bibles, and declare that whatever sticks to their spines is Scripture, and that nothing else is. But you can only get the skins of the texts that way. If you want their juice you must press them in cluster."

Think truly, and thy thought
Shall some soul's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
A grand and noble creed.
