Christian Messenger.

Judging From Appearances.

"Hullo, Limpy, the cars will start in a minute, hurry up or we shall leave you behind."

The cars were waiting at a station of one of our Western railroads. The baggage master was busy with his checks. The men were hurrying to and fro with chests and valises, packages and trunks. Men, women, and children were rushing for the cars, and hastily securing their seats, while the locomotive snorted and puffed.

A man, carcessly dressed, was standing on a platform of a depot. He was looking around him, and seemingly paid little attention to what was passing. It was easy to see that he was lame, and at a glance one might have supposed that he was a man neither of wealth or influence.

The conductor gave him a contemptuous look, and slapping him familiarly on the shoulder called out:

"Hullo, limpy, better get aboard, or the cars will leave you behind."

"Time enough, I reckon," replied the individual, and he resumed his seemingly listless air.

"All aboard!" cried the conductor. "Get on, Limpy!" said he, passing the lame, carelessly dressed man.

The lame man made no reply.

Just as the train was slowly moving away the lame man stepped on the platform of the last car, and walking quietly in, took a seat.

The train had gone a few miles when the conductor appeared at the door of the car where our friend was sitting. Passing along, he soon discovered the stranger whom he had seen at the station.

"Your ticket, quick!"

"I don't pay," replied the lame man, quietly

"Don't pay?"

"No, sir."

"We'll see about that; I shall put you off at the next station!" and he seized a valise which was over the head of our friend.

"Better not be so rough, young man," returned the stranger.

The conductor released the carpet bag for a moment, and seeing that he could do no more then, passed on to collect the fare from the other passengers. As he stopped at a seat a few paces off, a gentleman who had heard the conversation just mentioned, looked up to the conductor, and asked:

"Do you know whom you were speaking to just now?"

"No sir."

"Are you sure?" asked the conductor, trying to conceal his agitation.

"I know him."

The color rose a little to the young man's face, but with a strong effort he controlled himself, and went on collecting his fares as usual.

Meanwhle Mr. Warburton sat quietly in his seat; none of those near him could unravel the exprssion of his face, nor tell what the next movement in the scene would be.

And he, of what thought he?

He had been rudely treated; he had been unkindly taunted with the infirmity which perhaps had come through no fault of his. He could revenge himself if he chose. He could tell the the simple truth, and the young man would be deprived of his place at once. Should he do it?

And yet why should he care? He knew what he was worth. He knew how he had risen to the position he now held.

When a little orange peddler, he stood by the street crossings, he had many a rebuff. He had outlived those days of hardship; he was respected now. Should he care for a stranger's roughness or taunt? Those who sat near waited curiously for the end.

Presently the conductor came back. With a steady energy he walked up to Mr. Warburton's side; he took his books from his pocket, the bank bills and tickets he had collected, and laid them in Mr. Warburton's hand.

"I resign my place, sir," he said.

The President looked over the accounts for a moment, then motioning him to a vacant seat, said:

"Sit down, sir; I would like to talk with you."

As the young man sat down, the President turned to him a face in which there was no angry feeling; and spoke to him in an undertone:

"My young friend, I have no revengful feeling to gratify in this matter; but you have been imprudent. Your manner, had it been thus to a stranger, would have been injurious to the company. I might tell the directors of this, but I will not. But in the future remember to be polite to all you meet. You cannot judge a man by the coat he wears, and even the poorest should be treated with civility. Take up your books, sir, I shall tell no one of what has happened. If you change your course, nothing that has passed shall injure you. Your situation is continued. Good morning sir."

NEARER HOME.

FRUME CAREY.

One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er;
I'm nearer my home to-day
Than I ever have been before;

Nearer my Father's house,
Where the many mansions be;
Nearer the great white throne,
Nearer the crystal sea;

Nearer the boatd of Life,
Where we lay our burdens down,
Nearer leaving the cross,
Nearer gaining the crown.

But the waves of that silent sea
Roll dark before my sight,
That brightly on the other side
Break on a shore of light.

O, if my mortal feet
Have almost gained the brink,
If it be I am nearer home
Even to-day, than I think.

Father, prefect my trust,
Let my spirit feel in death
That her feet are firmly set
On the Rock of a living faith.

THE LUXURY OF LOAFING.—Idleness, pure and unmixed, is one of the greatest luxuries of human life. It is also a luxury peculiarly appropriate to the holiday season. On the same principle, I am very much in favor of lying in bed late of a morning. Theoretically I hold the latitudinarian principle; but practically I am a tolerably early riser. The more sleep you give the brain, the better quality does the brain become, and the better is the energy and harmonious play of the whole system. Sleep as much as you can, but never lie in bed after you awake, "thinking," as you are sometimes pleased to term it. It is all a mistake. It is the worst kind of debauch; as bad as dram-taking; I do not believe that there is any real quality of thought in such morning reveries, Similary of the delights of idleness, the pleasures of the Castle of Indolence, some qualifying language must be used. I know of no greater pleasure than to saunter about for a whole day with one's hands in one's pockets, and with a steady determination to think, wait, and do nothing at all. In order to do this with proper effect, a man ought to be on tolerably good terms with own conscience: otherwise some dark influences will begin to brew disquiet in his mind. But this idleness is a first-rate clarifying process, Without any settled, studious efforts of the mind, the subjects, that has troubled you will begin to take shape and form. All kinds of matters, which had been waiting for a quiet hour of deliberation, will gradually, and almost without a conscious effort be satisfactorily disposed of the corroding recollections that there is something to be done. Such idle days, of which the Caliph could only score up eleven; and it may be that the happy day and the idle day are synonymous. I know of no greater luxury than to wake up in the morning thinking it is seven, and finding it is nine. I always calculate on a feeling of intense vitality for that day, and an extra amount of my very limited power of doing and enduring.—Exchange.

"Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? there is no searching of his understanding.

"He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength.

"Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall:

"But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint."—Isaiah xxxx, 28 to 31.

Those who do not feel inclined to believe that the Paris insurrection was a formidable one have only to notice the number of arms taken: 403,691 guns; 1,007 field cannon, and 1,610. artillary waggons. The cannon on the fortifications, amounting to 1,100, are not counted in this statement.

Speaker Blaine, who is at home in Maine, thinks it strange that the newspapers should report him in the Rocky Mountains, and at San Francisco, besides being on a tour in Europe. He says he has not been away from Maine this summer.
