

The Twentieth Century. The twentieth century began January 1st, 1901, and will end with 2000. People did not begin to reckon time from A. D. 1. They waited until about the 550 year of the Christian era. People who begin to take the great health restorative, Hoyer's stomach Bitters, immediately after the first outbreak of dyspepsia, malaria, rheumatism, constipation, nervousness or kidney trouble will date their cure immediately from then.

MODERN BOOKS AND PLAYS.

Their Titles Are Picturesque and Suggestive, if Nothing More.

"Have you seen 'When Pouched Eggs Were on Toast?'"

"No—I've read the book. Have you seen 'Under Two Breads?'"

"Not yet. I've read the book. I shouldn't think it would make nearly so good a play as 'Unleavened Flax.'"

"I didn't read 'Unleavened Flax,' but if it was as poor a book as it was a play it wasn't worth reading. Still, you can't always tell. You've seen 'In the Palace of Harum,' of course."

"Oh, yes, indeed—I wasn't half through the book when I saw that."

"I didn't read the book. I was afraid they'd put the last chapter first as they did when they dramatized 'David Meredith.' You know, I don't believe in this dramatizing a novel where you mix it up until you can't recognize it."

"Oh, I do. It's ever so much more exciting all mixed up. I like the kind of dramatized novel where you can't tell which novel it is until the third act at least."

"To Shave and to Scold' ought to make a good play—don't you think so?"

"Oh, yes, indeed; much better than 'Carvice Janet' did. By the way, did you ever hear of a play by the name of 'Hamlet?'"

"'Hamlet?' Why, I don't remember any novel of that name. Really? You don't mean it? Oh, if that's the case I shouldn't care to see it. Have you read Huxley's 'Life and Letters?'"

"No, there's not the slightest chance of its being dramatized. I'm told, I'm reading 'When the Soup Grows Cold'—the advertisement says it's sure to be dramatized."—New York Evening Sun.

Balzac's Convenient Trousers.

In a little village in the heart of Touraine lives a small, brown old man, says the London Onlooker, whose great pride it is that he once had the honor of making a pair of trousers for Balzac. The old tailor delights to tell of his meeting with the distinguished Frenchman.

When I got to the chateau where Monsieur Balzac was staying, I found him in the garden writing a novel. He was so busy that I waited a bit. Many sheets of paper, covered with fine writing, lay around him. He would write a spell then stare wildly about, and then go at it again as if he knew that a world was waiting for his words.

After standing near and watching him a while I had to interrupt him to get his measure for the trousers. Monsieur Balzac was very good-natured. He smiled while I measured him, but he spoke but once.

"No feet," he said, as I finished, and returned at once to his work.

I didn't know at all what he meant, but some way I did, have courage to interrupt him again to ask, but I met a servant and inquired of him what his master meant by "No feet."

"Oh," says he, "Monsieur Balzac wants his trousers made without any openings at the bottom, so that he can sit and write without having to put on slippers."

Satisfied with His Job.

One of Cleveland's leading business concerns hired a new man the other day, and a little later, when the superintendent passed by, he noticed that the new man was smoking a pipe. The rule against smoking on the premises is a rigid one.

"See here, my man," cried the official, "you can't smoke here."

The new man looked up and nodded and the superintendent passed along.

A half hour later he was back again, and lo! the new man was still enjoying his pipe.

"Say," the official cried, "didn't I tell you that smoking was not permitted here?"

"You did," replied the new man.

"Didn't you understand me?"

"I did."

"See here, perhaps you don't know who I am?"

"That's a true word."

"Well, I'm the superintendent."

The new man looked up at the official with an expression of deep interest.

"Are you sure,?" he cried. "Superintendent, eh? Well, it's a fine job—take care of it."

And he calmly returned to his work.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Patriotism Versus Pounds.

Uncle Silas Pennwise had never seen Boston Harbor before. "This is the place, I suppose," he said, gazing at its blue waters, crowded with shipping, "where our Revolution forefathers threw that tea overboard."

"Yes," responded his city nephew, his eye kindling. "I don't wonder it stirs you to the depths to look at the scene of that historic event. It marked an epoch in the world's history which no patriotic American can recall without a thrill of pride."

"Ye-es," replied Uncle Silas, musingly. "I—I wonder how much the fellows lost who owned that tea."

Appreciative.

"You have a fine pedigree," said the American multi-millionaire to the nobleman.

"Yes," was the nonchalant answer.

"And I want to tell you, I appreciate such things. If there is anything I take an interest in it is a pedigree. Why, when I was younger I could go to the races and name over the ancestry of every horse at the track."—Washington Star.

Laureate Nonsense.

She tells all suffering women how she was cured of Ovarian Inflammation by

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—When I wrote to you a few months ago I had been suffering from inflammation of the ovaries and womb for over eighteen months. I had a continual pain and soreness in my back and side. I believe my troubles were caused by overwork and lifting some years ago. Life was a drag to me and I felt like giving up. I had several doctors, but they did me little good. I began to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound four months ago and am in better health to-day than I have been for years. All my pains are gone. Your Vegetable Compound has made me well. I recommend it to all suffering women."—Mrs. S. J. Watson, Hampton, Va.

When there is one remedy that is sure, and hundreds of thousands of women know from experience its reliability, is it wise to experiment with untried and comparatively unknown medicines?

WAS TORTURED

An Indianapolis Woman's Sworn Statement of the Way in Which She Was Saved From Death.

From the Indianapolis News.

Mrs. Mary K. Burns, of 505 Hiawatha street, Indianapolis, Ind., 16 living evidence of the wonderful power of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, the remedy that cures where all others fail. For years she endured all the tortures of indigestion, nervousness and female weakness, a complication of troubles that five physicians confessed their inability to cure. Her story is well worth the attention of every woman. She says:

"My illness commenced after my first child was born. I was so weak and nervous that it seemed I would never get strong. For twelve years I doctored for female trouble, complicated with nervousness and indigestion. My stomach was so weak that for days at a time I could eat nothing but bread and milk. I was also troubled with palpitation of the heart and was often so miserable that I could not lie down. Five doctors prescribed for me, and I took many kinds of medicine without being benefited. One day I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills advertised in the papers and I decided to give them a trial. I did so and had not finished taking the first box when I knew that I was getting better."

"You can imagine the relief I felt when I found that after years of suffering I was being cured. I continued taking the pills, and the boxes for $2.50 were never sold in bulk by any other medicine; they have restored my health, strength and happiness."

"MRS. MARY K. BURNS."

LONGEVITY IN 19TH CENTURY.

Professions Compared—Philosophers and Farmers in the Lead.

"Has the past century contributed toward the increase or the diminution of human longevity?" That was the question discussed the other day by a group of French scientists. In comparing the statistics of mortality in the nineteenth century with those brought out by DuVillard at the close of the previous century it appears that the average longevity since 1780 increased by five or six years. Therefore, the question put by our medical celebrity would seem to be answered, the answer pointing to an increase of the average length of life. But the present effort is to reveal the cause, if it is a real one, in the figures before us; and that is a thorny problem.

Dr. Vacher and M. Bertillon fix the average longevity in the nineteenth century at 73 years. All things being equal, the number of people who reached the age of 73 was greater in the generations of the nineteenth century than it was in those of the eighteenth. Vacher only arrives at approximations. He tried to find out if professional possession any influence over the chances of life, and he was unable to come to a conclusion, because he found centenarians in all professions, even the most unremunerative. For all that, he thinks that he can give the palm to agriculture, because it was in the families of farmers that he found the greatest number of persons who had reached an advanced age. Here statistics are in accord with the most rational provisions.

The profession which presents a happy medium in the matter of longevity is that of the scientist. Among the savants one finds as many men who die young as the number who die very old. We know that Fontenelle lived to 100 years, and that Chevreul was 163. Among those who reached quite respectable, although their years were fewer in number, are Humboldt, who died at 80; Newton, at 85; Franklin, at 84, and Buffon, at 81.

The list of those who died very young, like Bichat and Pascal, is just as long; but it includes, unfortunately, the martyrs of science, those who fell upon the field of honor in the effort to harvest some new truth—Jaquemont and Comerson in Sweden, Hasselquist and Abel in Sweden, Solokoff in Russia and many others. Such deaths are beyond the reach of the massive rules of statistics. It is noteworthy, however, that the celebrated Cassini family is about the only one in which the dual inheritance of longevity and scientific genius lasted through four generations.—Courier des Etats Unis.

A Boy's Composition on Girls.

Girls is things what gets taken out for nothing to theyatres and circusses and parties and everything. I wish I was a girl, my sister Mary was one and she's got a soft thing of it too. Hank Wilson comes to see her every knight and he talks her out riding and dancing, and everything. He never talks me out altho I'd like it just as well.

When duff Gordon was here I heard Hank Wilson tell him that his girl was an awful expense to him, and that he had to treat her to oysters and ice-cream, and everything. Then duff gordon winked and sed, never mind, her old man has got lots of tin.

Yes sed Hank I'll Marred and then if she wants chocklet kandle she'll have to get it herself. Then they Poked each other in the ribs and laffed. We had dinner rite after that and Hank Wilson and I duff Gordon was there too some ev your tin. Tin? Said pa what do you mean? Wed I said Hank Wilson said Mary was an ordel xpens to him and duff gordon sed never mind, that the old man is got lots of tin and then Hank sed after he was Married Mary would have to hie her chocklet kandle herself, and then evribodi skolded me and kalled me nains and they got fighting among themselves and Mary kided and Hank looked like if he was going to cry too and a after while they made up and kided and said I wuz a young lar and Hank Wilson give me a quarter and tolled me to keep quiet and not to be 2 fresh. I never did like girls amishoo.

The Away-From-Home Girl.

"Write your home letters regularly and keep in touch with your parents and old friends by weekly correspondence," writes Margaret E. Sangster, in the Ladies' Home Journal, addressing girls who have gone from home into the world to seek their livelihood.

"Never let a Sunday afternoon drift out without your hour spent in an intimate and loving letter to the dear mother. This is a good occupation for Sunday, and I can hardly tell you how minute and confidential and affectionate this writing should be. But there is no need. You know what you like to hear from home, and what mother and father most long for, when your letters come. I follow those letters. Mother is in the kitchen, washing the dishes. She wipes her hands and sits down in the low rocking-chair by the window where the lilac is beginning to bud. Father stands between the table and the door, waiting to hear what you have said, and aware that he must wait until mother has satisfied her heart with the first reading. Then it will be his turn. To them both you are, and you will always be, just their own little girl, and you can never send them a line which they will not scan with eagerness. So never put off your family at home with a scrawpy, hurried scrawl; take time; and tell them everything."

Discordant Custom in Berlin.

Berlin is probably the only city of any size in which there is absolutely no attempt at anything like a general dinner hour, or even at uniform business hours. Each circle of professions has its own hours of business, which naturally regulate the household meal arrangements. Army and official circles have certain hours of duty; banking and commercial houses have their own hours; writers, actors and artists theirs; and the university and the schools form another set with other hours. If you have a wide visiting list in Berlin you may be asked out to dinner at any time from 2 until 7. Hopeless dyspepsia is the penalty if you do not keep in one set.

Auctioneers are an obliging lot; they always attend to every one's bidding.
