Hot Weather in Europe.

LONDON, July 2.—While the weather in England is temperate, Continental telegrams continue to report the ravages of heat and storm. Deaths from sunstroke are numerous. In an Italian regiment which was marching from Piasa to Leghorn yesterday there were 30 cases of sunstroke, while many of the soldiers dropped from exhaustion. Storms have occurred in Northern France, where lightning wrecked churches and houses.

SKAGWAY FLAG INCIDENT.

Two Other Men Followed GeForge Miller's Example and Pulled Down British Flags.

Seattle, July 2.—The second "flag incident" to take place at Skagway, which is to all intents and purposes an American port, occurred there recently—immediately after the incident mentioned in the Telegram last week, when Attorney Miller, of Eugene, Or, was the prime mover in the taking down of the Union Jack, which was occupying the place of honor, whereas Mr Miller and hundreds of others knew that the Stars and Stripes should have the place. Mr Miller pulled down the British flag, wound it up in a bunch, threw it on the ground and figuratively spat upon it." The Canadians at the time said they would ask our Government for an apology.

Bright and early next morning after the above incident Colonel Bushy, commander of the British troops at Skagway, ran up the Union Jack to the place of honor as it was before being pulled down. Two men, who appeared on the streets of the city, soon after, seeing the insult, walked to the flagstaff and yanked down the British ensign.

Average July Weather.

The records of the Weather Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture, covering a period of 29 years at Portland, Oregon, show the mean temperature of July to have been 66 degrees. The warmest July was that of 1875, with an average of 70 degrees; and the coldest that of 1878 with an average of 64 degrees. The highest temperature recorded in the month was 102 degrees on July 28, 1891; the lowest, 46 degrees, on the 15 h, 1887.

The average rainfall for the month has been 0.58 of an inch; the average number of days on which rain has fallen, 4. The greatest precipitation for the month was 1.80 inches in 1884; the least was none in 1883. The average number of cloudy days has been 6; partly cloudy, 9; clear, 16

New York Convicts Alarmed by Tornado.

NEW YORK, July 2.—A tornado struck the shore of the Hudson River, near Ossing, N Y, this afternoon, cutting a path two miles or more long and several hundred feet wide. All along its course trees were uprooted, buildings unroofed and windows blown in. The tornado embraced practically the whole village, and the Sing Sing prison was in the very center of the storm's path. Almost every window on the water side of the prison was blown in, and rain and yellow mud, scooped up by the wind, were driven through the prison in every direction.

The prisoners had just been locked in their cells for the night when the blast hit the place. They set up an awful howling and screaming. Their terror was intensified when a moment after the windows were blown in there was a ripping and roaring sound by the wind tearing off the roof of the administration building.

Heat Withers Russian Crops.

London, July 2.—A dispatch from St Petersburg says the crops in the province of Saratoff are withering and the grass is scorched owing to the prolonged heat and drought. The price of corn is climbing up and the outlook at Saratoff and in the neighboring Volga districts is alarming. The scarcity promises to be as severe as the famine a decade ago.

A PHILOPENA.

BY VENITA SEIBERT.

Copyright, 1901, by Venita Seibert.

John Armstrong took Miss Harlowe out to dinner, and neither the dinner nor the diners received any of his attention, for it was entirely occupied by Miss Harlowe.

"Will you eat a philopena with me, Mr. Armstrong?" asked Miss Harlowe.

"What's a philopena?"

"Oh, you cannot accept anything from me, and I cannot accept anything from you. If one of us does and the other cries 'Philopena!' the unfortunate is obliged to give a pawn."

"Those are very hard conditions—altogether unfair," said Armstrong.

"Eat it!" Miss Harlowe commanded imperiously; then she looked down at her plate. "There is always a way to get around the hardest conditions," she said softly.

"Philippa carried on as usual this evening," remarked the hostess to her husband when the last guest had gone. "I declare, that girl is simply dreadful. She is the dearest, prettiest thing, but she seems to think that all men were created solely for her amusement."

"My dear," said he, "John Armstrong is able to take care of himself."

But Mrs. West knew he wasn't.

Philippa was sleeping the sleep of the just. Probably it was the sleeplessness of the unjust that John Armstrong was experiencing.

He had been warned.

"She is as beautiful as a picture and with about as much heart," said Travers.

"She is beautiful, and she has a heart to match her face," replied Armstrong. "You fellows have never been able to reach it, that's all. She isn't a woman to be lightly won, and I like her for it."

"Lightly won! Good heavens! That's just it—she doesn't want to be won. She only wants to be wooed. John, my boy, I admire your delicious self conceit and your stubbornness, but I tell you she is just playing with you."

"I do not care to discuss Miss Harlowe any further," said Armstrong coldly. And Travers knew that he had said as much as he dared.

Philippa sat in her drawing room waiting for John Armstrong. She was smiling to herself as she remembered that she had told three men she would not be at home tonight.

"He comes out of his shell when there is no one else here," she said to herself. "What a great, noble head he has! And what a will! I will tell him about the other men."

He came directly, and she welcomed him very sweetly, but as she looked in his face she saw a certain firmness about the lips and a steady light of purpose burning in his eyes, and she shivered a little. Like Travers, she knew that she had gone as far as she dared.

She became desperately gay, but Armstrong was in no mood for raillery. He sat silent and watched the play of the light on her hair, the delicate rose color that burned in her cheeks, the quick drooping and curving of her lips.

Then he leaned suddenly over her. He was tremendously in earnest; his straightforward nature could brook no preamble. She certainly understood him by this time.

"Philippa," he cried, "you know that you are dearer than life to me! Do not put me off any longer! I cannot bear it! You are very beautiful, dear, like some exquisite flower, with all your gifts and graces, and I am only an awkward, abrupt fellow. I have nothing much to offer you, I know I am not worthy of you, but I can give you a heart that is all yours and a lifetime of love and devotion. Will you accept it, Philippa?"

Philippa laughed nervously. Then she furled and unfurled her fan and looked up archly.

"Accept anything from you? Why, you must think I have forgotten our philopena. Besides, if I did accept, you know, I shouldn't have a thing to give you for a pawn."

"Philippa, do not trifle with me."

"You are very unreasonable!" Philippa cried, conscious, however, that her eyelashes were failing her for the first time. "You ask me to accept a—a gift just as if there never was such a thing as a philopena."

Armstrong rose. His lips were white, his eyes full of pain. He looked down on her a moment, then he said quietly, "Goodby, Philippa," and strode from the room.

He took his overcoat from the hall tree and dragged it on deliberately.

"Like many another poor fool, I see that I have endowed a beautiful doll with a soul," he said to himself, with a bitter smile.

He jammed his hat down over his head and slid back the chain of the door. Then he felt the touch of a hand, and he turned and saw what no one had ever seen before—Philippa's brilliant eyes all soft and misty with tears. She laid her cheek against his sleeve.

"John, dear John, forgive me!" she cried, with a little sob. "I do accept, and here—I will give you the pawn in advance."

She drew his head down and kissed him, and Armstrong folded her in his arms without a word.

"You see, dear," whispered Philippa, "I couldn't give you my heart for a pawn because you already had it, long ago."

Celebration.

When the goat had eaten the lighted firecrackers the boy fell to mocking him with open throat.

"How," queried the boy, "do you like the celebration?"

"A bit of gay bunting would help out, I think," quoth the goat.

Suiting the action to the word, the goat did not do a thing to the boy.—Detroit Journal.

The wool clip of the Baldwin Sheep and Land Co of Crook county amounting to 870,000 pounds, was sold at auction at Shaniko, Oregon, the other day. The bidding was done through sealed bids, and the wool went to a Boston firm at 12½ cents per pound.

HOW SHE PROPOSED.

"Well, Nell, I hear you were a belle rather than a beau at the leap year dance."

"Oh, yes; I came out victorious and had a glorious time."

"Make any proposals?"

"Certainly I did."

"How did you get up the courage?"

"It wasn't courage I had to get, but bloomers."

"Bloomers!"

"I escorted Mr. Ieland, who is a visitor here, and I had the pleasure of seeing Frank look unhappy as we walked in. I devoted myself to Mr. Leland and flirted with several others, while I kept an outlook for Frank.

"Finally I strolled off with him and guided him to a quiet nook, where we had the opportunity to talk unobserved. The music floated dreamily to our ears, and Frank looked sentimental.

"I felt wicked.

"He had danced but little. Still, I fanned him as though he were on the verge of fainting. (Been treated that way myself by thoughtful men.)

"Then he tries to be chatty, thinking if he is agreeable that he will be a belle, I suppose.

"'Lovely floor for dancing, isn't it?'

"'Yes,' I answer, stifling a yawn.

"'Quite a crowd too. I like the waltz, I believe, better than any of the dances. I prefer it to any of the new dances.'

"'Yes; so do I.' (Still I show no inclination to enjoy one now.)

"He keeps up the small talk, while I look as though planning my escape. (I have sometimes seen men look that way.) 'Mr. E. looks well tonight,' I say. (He hates Mr. E.)

"'And Mr. G. is a graceful dancer, but the young man I escorted this evening is the prettiest dancer on the floor.' I go on now, growing animated. 'Ah, there's the two step, and I have that promised me by him now, so I will take you to the gay crowd again, as I must ask you to excuse me.'

"'No; you needn't take me anywhere,' he snaps. 'I'm no woman or baby.' 'Oh, well, I must play my role, you know, and be polite to the gentlemen as they are to the ladies. But there's one thing I want to say before I go,' and here I look stern.

"'You have been with that Bell Boro all the evening. Now, if you think anything of me, I wish you not to dance with her again. I have my reason for asking this,' I add. (My reason is to be revenged for some former thoughtless conduct on his part.) Poor fellow, he is miserable and says in an aggrieved voice:

"'She asks me, you know, and what am I to do? I can't insult a lady.'

"'Very well,' I retort, 'if you think more of her opinion than you do of mine, it's all right, and since I am to leave you here, will you excuse me, please?' I bow very low and walk off with a haughty and injured air.

"Outside I meet Bell looking for him, and I feel mean to think how lonely Frank must feel, and how like Enoch Arden he must be for the rest of the evening. He will hide out from Bell, I know, and she was his escort, so she will be angry with him for disappearing, and the other girls, having noted his preference for me before leap year, are indifferent, leaving him to my tender mercies.

"I dance and look happy and smile so sweetly on Mr. Leland that all think he is winning my heart or that I am winning his. So I keep it up, which shows that a woman as well as a man may smile and smile and be a villain still.

"I am unusually gay as I see Frank glaring at me, having emerged from his solitude. He has decided to plead illness and leave the scene where he has played the wallflower. But I ask him to waltz to detain him. 'No, thanks,' he mutters. 'I am not dancing.'

"'Let's sit and talk then,' I go on very sweetly.

"'How can you leave the lovely Mr. L.?' he asks.

"'Why, I could leave anybody for you,' I say.

"'Indeed?' And he looks incredulous.

"'Well, how could you call attention to the fact that I had danced often with a certain lady when all who run may read of your infatuation for a stranger?'

"'No; a visitor,' I say, 'and so entitled to the courtesies bestowed on him.'

"'So visitors make you forget friends?'

"'Oh, no, never. But, Frank, he has serious intentions. You and I shall always be the best of friends, you know, but you are not able to marry' (he has often told me so), 'so I thought as Mr. L.'—

"'Mr. L. be blanked!' he says excitedly. 'Tis true until recently my salary would not justify me in asking the girl I love to be mine. But now'—

"'But now—don't interrupt me,' I break in. 'I only asked you not to dance with Bell to bother you and to see if you would obey me. So, having found you willing to love and obey, I wish to tell you that I care for no one but you; that while dancing with Mr. L. I have been thinking of you.'

"We drift to the quiet nook again, and I proceed: 'I care only to be with you, Frank. I would die for you, but this being leap year may I not live with you?' He murmured, 'Yes.'"

The Result.

"My wife and I tossed up last night to see whether she'd get a new bonnet or I'd get a new suit."

"Who won?"

"I did."

"What kind are you going to get?"

"Well, she hasn't decided yet whether to have it trimmed with flowers or feathers."—Harper's Bazar.

RAMBLERS VS BROWNSVILLE.

Interesting Game of Baseball on Kincaid Field This Afternoon.

Daily Guard, uly 3

Quite a crowd witnessed an interesting game of baseball this afternoon on Kincaid field betwee the Ramblers of Eugene and the Brownsville team. Some good ball was played by both teams and the crowd was satisfied with the game in general. The lineup of the two teams is as follows:

RAMBLERS.		BROWNSVILLE.
McFarland	c	Snyder
Parish	p	McFarland G
Branstetter	s s	Kerr
Knox	1 b	Long
Griffin	2 b	Averill
Hadley	3 b	Reese
Holland	l f	McFarland, F
Hayes	r f	Smith
Benner	c f	Williams

The game was called at 3:30 o'clock, too late to give the result in this evening's paper.

The Ramblers leave tonight for Grants Pass where they play the local team tomorrow and the Ashland team next day.

As we go to press the score stands 5 to 1, in favor of the Ramblers, in the last half of the fifth inning.

TEN-MILE BICYCLE RACE.

Cole McElroy and Harry Miller Ran a Tie.

A 10-mile bicycle race was run this afternoon by Harry Miller and Coleridge McElroy, coming out a tie.

They started from the Rambler Cyclery, took the road to Springfield and back to Eugene by the river road, a total distance of 10½ miles.

HOLE IN THE LUNGS

There are thousands of men and women, as well as ever, with holes in their lungs: consumption stopped.

Consumption stopped is consumption cured. What does it?

Some change in the way of life and Scott's emulsion of cod-liver oil.

With the emulsion, give some attention to circumstances: change from a dark damp close room to a sunny dry airy one; from city to country; from hard to an easy life; indoors to out.

A hole in the lungs once healed is no worse than a too-tight waist or waistcoat.

Take the emulsion, and give it a chance to heal the wound.

We'll send you a little to try, if you like.

Grosvenor Denies Having Said McKinley Would Not Get Third Term.

KANSAS CITY, July 2.—General Chas H Grosvenor, of Ohio, speaking to a reporter of the utterances regarding the third term question imputed to him said: "I was misquoted. The interview published was a distortion of a mere statement of historical facts regarding Washington's reasons for not accepting a third term, which I made to a party of young men. I will not say and I have not said whether I think Mr McKinley could be elected again, but I do say that in my judgment no man will ever be elected to a third term."

General Grosvenor is en route to Winfield, Kan, where he will deliver an address on July 4.

THE SUMMER SCHOOL.

Good Work Being Done at the State University.

The summer session of the University of Oregon is in progress, and although the attendance is not large, the work is satisfactory and quite a number of the regular instructors are busily engaged.

Work on the new building which will be used as a lighting and heating plant, is progressing rapidly and it is certain that the structure will be completed by the time college opens in September.
