DR. THOMAS CONDON.

His Eightieth Birthday Remembered Yesterday.

HIS LIFE AND HIS WORK.

The man who has health, intellectuality, originality and an unselfish love of mankind deserves and generally receives the tributes of high esteem of his fellow-men. As age grows upon such a man so, also, does the intensity of esteem increase. To it was with fitting tokens of flowers and words of good cheer that his friends and the students remembered yesterday the eightieth birthday anniversary of Dr. Thos. Condon.

Born in Southern Ireland on March 3, 1822, Mr. Condon was taken at the age of eleven by his parents to New York, where he received his early education and grew to manhood. He next attended a Methodist college at Cazenovia in Madison county, N. Y. After a few years spent in teaching, he studied at Auburn theological seminary by which he was graduated in 1852. Married the same year to Miss Correlia Holt, of Buffalo, he with his wife set sail with a band of missionaries for San Francisco by the Cape Horn route. The voyage was long and perilous and for three days the courage and strength of the missionaries were severely tested in the struggle with a fire in the smouldering cargo.

Mr. and Mrs. Condon arrived in Western Oregon in the fall of '52, where they found many of New England who had brought their appreciation of schools and churches. After ten years of work they moved to The Dalles, then a wild and needy field, where Mr. Condon became pastor of a Congregational church, composed of many creeds.

A minister without a study, Mr. Condon climbed the steep bluffs above the town and thought out his sermons while he wandered over the breezy hillsides. He always carried along a geologist's pick and hammer, for while in Central New York, as a student and teacher, he took deep interest and spent much time in the study and collection of ancient life-forms so common in the limestone of that section. A stronger interest was awakened in the unknown interior when an army officer brought home a few Triglona and other fossil shells. When it became safe to penetrate the John Day valley without armed escort, Mr. Condon entered a new field which kindled an enthusiasm in geological research that has never ceased to be one of his chief delights.

Dr. Condon was the first to identify the bones of a fossil horse in this country, for previous to 1866 it was thought that the horse was not indigenous to the Western continent but had been imported from Europe. From the old lake beds of Eastern Oregon, Prof. Condon had collected many specimens of the horse family of the Miocene and Pliocene ages. When railway communication with the East was effected, Prof. Marsh of Yale, visited the West. He spent many hours in the little museum at The Dalles and here he identified the three-toed Hipparion foot and tried hard to induce Mr. Condon to part with it; for he knew well only one other such specimen existed, and that in distant France.

The "John Day Fossil Beds" have become noted throughout the scientific world and Dr. Condon has the distinction of being the discoverer of them as such.

Dr. Condon has stood as a maker of opinion, a reconciler of men. When the great battle in the intellectual world arose after the publication of Darwin's "Origin of Species" and "Descent of Man," Dr. Condon was ready to face the conflict. His theory of evolution was twenty-five years ahead of the world; for a quarter of a century he maintained what thinkers are accepting today. He presented to the human mind a wider conception of God than the world had ever known before. This conception involved a beginning of simplest forms which gradually unfolded into the more complex, never losing the continuity of purpose; with a steady progress toward the culmination, the spiritual life of man.

Believing it his duty to shape the minds of men, Dr. Condon felt that the most effective work could be done with his cabinet, because at this time, the study of science, uninterpreted, was leading young men of our colleges into materialism. This, with other motives, led him finally in 1876, to accept the chair of geology and natural history at the University of Oregon. Here he moved his large and valuable cabinet, gathered during his twenty years ministry in Oregon; and here he has remained for twenty-six years, faithfully devoted to the work he loves so well.

Dr. Condon is now bringing together the results of his discoveries and observations on the geology of Oregon in a book, "The Two Islands and What Became of Them."

WELCOME NEWS FROM ETRURIA.

Special to the Guard.

NEW YORK, March 4—The missing Cunard transatlantic liner Etruria has been located four hundred miles west of Fayal in tow of an unknown steamer. The Etruria lost her propellor.

[Fayal is one of the Azores group of islands, about 1200 miles west of the Spanish coast.—EDITOR GUARD.]

CY BINGHAM ALRIGHT.

Special to the Guard.

COTTAGE GROVE, March 4—Information was sent out from the "Warehouse" on the road into the Bohemia mines this afternoon by telephone that Cy Bingham, brother of the owner of the Music mine, was found at 1 o'clock this afternoon, and was none the worse for staying out in the mountains several days alone and almost without food except what he killed.

[Bingham started on a deer hunt Friday morning last. From the above dispatch he was lost in the mountains at least four days. He is a powerful man else would have probably perished as the snow is about 18 inches deep on the mountain.—EDITOR GUARD.]

THE LOST MAN.

Further Particulars of Cy Bingham's Disappearance.

Daily Guard March 4

The GUARD's special correspondent at Cottage Grove, under date of yesterday, sends the following particulars of how Cy Bingham got lost in the mountains at the Bohemia mines, mention of which was made in yesterday's GUARD:

Cy Bingham, the well known Bohemia mining man, is lost in the Bohemia mountains. Mr. Bingham, in company with Mr. Wood, chief of the railroad surveying party, went out hunting last Saturday, leaving the Warehouse early in the morning and going in an easterly direction. About 1 o'clock the men disagreed as to the direction of camp and, as is often done by hunters, separated. Mr. Wood got into camp that evening all right, but Mr. Bingham has not been heard of since.

I. H. Bingham, a brother of the lost man, was telephoned for and came up from Portland this afternoon, and in company with Mr. Hugh Behne, started for the Warehouse on horseback.

The latest word from Bohemia was to the effect that the men at Helena mine and others had turned out in force to hunt for Mr. Bingham.

Hopes are entertained that he has made camp somewhere and will stand the storm till rescued; but it is a serious matter as there is a pretty heavy fall of snow up there.

It is suggested that he may have crossed the divide to the Middle Fork country as they were about three miles east of the Warehouse at the time they separated and it is not at all impossible for a lost man to cross the divide there and come out on the other side. In that case he will have to come around by Pleasant Hill and Creswell to get home.

LATER—BINGHAM FOUND.

As will be noticed in our telegraphic columns, Mr. Bingham has been found.

The Palmer property, corner of West Seventh and Lawrence streets, occupied by the family of C. H. Hale, has been sold to A. E. Wheeler.

AT THE WOOLEN MILL

Machinery Being Set Up Rapidly
---Two More Car Loads.

A BIG SCOURING MILL PROJECTED.

Daily Guard, March 4

The work of setting up the machinery in the Willamette Valley Woollen Manufacturing Co's new building is progressing rapidly. R. McMurry, president of the company, yesterday received a telegram from Philadelphia informing him that a carload of cards for the mill was shipped from there Friday and that a car load of looms will be shipped in a short time, all arriving here in a course of three or four weeks.

Contractor Alley has begun work on the new dyeing and picking room just east of the main building and Contractor Bellman is setting the big boiler in place.

Mr. McMurry says the company is thinking of erecting a large scouring plant to scour the wool of Western Oregon, as there is no such establishment in this part of the state and only two in Eastern Oregon, one at Pendleton and the other at The Dalles. If they decide to build, the mill will not be ready to handle this year's crop but will be in operation in time to work on next year's.

At present all the wool shipped East from Western Oregon is sent in its original state, and freight is paid on many pounds of dirt and grease that is eliminated by the scouring process. It is intended to erect a plant with sufficient capacity to handle all of the Western Oregon wool. The machinery would cost about $300,000, and would employ 15 or 16 men four months in the year.

A spur from the main line of the railroad would be built to the new mill, as hundreds of carloads would be shipped. Mr. McMurry informs us that the Southern Pacific Co. has promised the woollen mill company special rates on all wool shipped to and from the scouring mill if it is built.

Being the only one in this section of the state the scouring mill will be a paying proposition.
