

Eugene Guard

SATURDAY, JUNE 14

THE PENITENTIARY ESCAPE.

The harvest of death that convicts Tracey and Merrill left behind them in their sensational escape from the Oregon state penitentiary Monday morning, and the ease with which the guards missed the men as they got a ladder and scaled the prison-yard wall in plain view and easy rifle shot, are suggestive. The guards can't shoot, else were too nervous to shoot at that kind of game. We suggest in case of the capture of the thugs that they be given guard duty. Three dead men under such exciting circumstances is sufficient evidence as to their ability to handle the rifle.

Armed as they are, and desperate as men may be from the knowledge that their lives are certain forfeit in case of capture, there is sure to be more loss of life if their pursuers crowd them too close. Hunting such men is not a pleasant job. Their lack of knowledge of the country will militate against their finally getting completely away, still the season of year is greatly in their favor. They can cross the country in any direction, the weather permits their remaining or sleeping in any place of hiding, while they may procure food from gardens at night without risk of being observed or located.

Of course they had their plans laid as to the course they would pursue when once outside. And men as cool as they proved themselves to be during the trying moments of escape are not liable to lose their heads now that they are free men. They may be caught and made to expiate their terrible crime on the gallows, but it seems to us the chances are against such a desired consummation of justice. Incidentally it may be remarked that they are good men to leave alone unless the pursuer can catch them napping or off their guard. Ordinarily men would be greatly excited under such circumstances, but they shot as if shooting at a target. And they got their man every time.

KILLED SLEEP FOR THE OTHER MAN.

"A fellow out in my country," said Representative Cushman, the State of Washington humorist, "owed another fellow $10. It was due on Tuesday. At midnight on Monday night the man who owed the money came around, woke his friend up and told him he couldn't pay the ten."

Looked at from a financial standpoint there is nothing but loss resultant from the Boer war. On the one side the republics are wiped out of existence, and on the other the cost of bringing this result about has been far in excess of any resulting benefits that even the ages can repay. The ending of the Boer war brings to mind the words of the greatest British general, who, after Waterloo, wrote his government: "Nothing except a battle lost can be half so melancholy as a battle won."

Singularly the Register after talking Farnish for weeks wants to hear no more about him. If the Republican press of the state had done its duty before their state convention met—warned their people of the character of the man—they would not be crying "quits" now. The Register should welcome reminders of the fact. They may be saved making similar mistakes in the future.

The Register says the GUARD has said enough about Farnish. Let us see! Farnish had 261 plurality in Lane county. The Republican candidates for secretary of state and state treasurer had 795 and 816 plurality respectively, evidently the party vote. We must have missed saying something we had ought to. Chamberlain should have the plurality.

The St. Louis exposition management pled to sign an obligation regarding itself not to allow the fair kept open on Sunday. Of course they did not like to sign, but the $5,000,000 government appropriation! They had to have it.
