How would it look for the Portland ball team to win a game? Now that the Fourth is past, perhaps the farmers may astely look for weather suitable for harvesting. The "hot air" about that extra session of the Oregon legislature seems to have been pretty near exhausted. King Edward VII is said to be worried about the prediction of some fortune teller who is responsible for the saying that he would never be crowned. Another billion dollar congress has adjourned, and the people of the country are scrambling to pay the bills. One-third of this amount goes for pensions and the Panama canal. Investments in road improvement have proven very satisfactory. The improvement of the McKenzie road is a move in the right direction. That is now a highway of much importance. It is said the state fair this year will have a better class of exhibits than ever before. It would be better if all the people of the state took more active interest in preparing and exhibiting their products. Now the people in the East are suffering a period of intense heat, and scores of prostrations and many deaths are reported daily. First they are stricken by storm, and then by heat. Oregon offers a good refuge. The keel of a great battle ship was laid the other day at Seattle. We congratulate the enterprise of the people of Washington. They are always awake and taking advantage of their opportunities. Why don't Oregon do something of the kind? The startling news comes from Paris that Patti was bused out of a large part of her wardrobe the other day. We don't know how it affects Patti, but a thief would not get much if he stole all the stage belongings of numerous prominent actresses over here. The striking mill men in Portland have gone longer than most striking bodies without disorder. They at least conduct themselves in a quiet and becoming manner, which is to their credit. Rioting and violence has weakened the cause of striking workmen in many instances, and has never been known to add strength. Now that must be somewhat impertinent for congressmen to ask General Funston if he can swim. General Funston is much advertised on account of his swimming feats. He is reported to have swum the Yukon river in Alaska, and the Rio Grande de l'ampanga in the Philippines, where he gained much notoriety. Now for congress to ask him if he can swim! Range horses in Eastern Oregon are now worth something in the market, and the cannery at Linnson is not called upon to handle so many as formerly. This is one result of the wisdom of the horsemen in producing an improvement in their stock. Cayuses are worth no more now than they were a few years ago, but horses coming from the ranges bring better prices because they are better horses. It does seem that this country should be able to send representatives abroad who would not forget their own country in their devotion to royalty. The love of title is too often overpowering to men in public position representing this great republic where all men are created equal and where great offices are the gift of the people and not mere birthright. Ambassador Choate, occupying probably the most important and responsible position in the gift of the administration, has shocked many of his former admirers by his conduct at a recent dinner of distinguished Americans in London. Even if he did deeply deplore the illness of the king, and even if he did have an engagement to meet the Prince of Wales, he should not have felt called upon to cut his own country so completely when he made a short speech upon retiring. He had no word of praise or encouragement for America, and in fact had apparently forgotten there was such a place, while his thoughts were wrapped up in the dear king and the royalty of the land to which he was accredited as a representative.

The fifty-seventh congress has become a thing of the past. Members will now go to their homes and endeavor to explain to their constituents that they have done grand and noble service. But the country is not satisfied. The great question before congress which required decisive and fearless action was that of legislating for the protection of the people against trusts. Bills have been introduced, a few speeches have been made, but no law has been enacted to restrain the greed of the trust magnates. They continue to exercise their power, and no law prevents them from grinding from the consumers of their products every nickel they can stand. There has been a powerful trust lobby about congress, whose influence has been clearly apparent throughout the session. These agents have been managing affairs and have allowed bills to be passed or have killed them as seemed to suit their purpose. It is particularly reported on good authority that this is the power which operated against the success of the Cuban reciprocity bill, and has stifled the industrial enterprise of that young and promising republic. What excuses can we expect to hear for this failure? An explanation is certainly due. The people have suffered under the pressure of trust prices and capitalistic greed, and have loudly called upon congress for some relief in the way of legislation. Congress has certainly failed in a very important duty.

Now the report comes that Andree, the Arctic explorer, has certainly perished in the north. This was to be expected. Many lives have been lost in the vain endeavor to reach the impenetrable north, and what is the recompense for this sacrifice? It is human nature, however, for men to attempt to attain that which is beyond reach, or that which others have sought but failed to accomplish.

What can we say of the people of this Northwest, anyway? Two great states with all their resources have allowed two convicts to escape from a penitentiary and after escaping to go for a month without being captured. Now one man goes about from place to place, making no attempt to disguise himself, calling for meals, clothing, horses, etc, wherever he wishes, and there are not men enough in the country to bring him to earth.

Postmaster Beebe of Sheridan, Yamhill county, is afflicted with two offices and, worst of all, he must hold to the poorest paying one for a time at least. He is postmaster at Sheridan and found out when he attempted to qualify as receiver of the Oregon City land office that he had to get rid of the small-pay office before he could take the one with the big salary attachment. Of course he will lose no time getting rid of the Yamhill county postmastership.

Major General Lloyd Wheaton goes on the retired list of the army on July 15, having reached the age limit of 64 years. General Wheaton performed much good service in the Philippines, and would have done more had he not been re-trained. He is energetic in his manner of action, and does not believe in conquering an armed foe in rebellion with sugar-coated words. He was one general who believed in no half-way station between peace and war. While dealing with peaceful citizens he is as genial and affable as one would desire; but when he is sent out to subdue an enemy with arms he is the kind to subdue the enemy first by force and treat with him afterward. Had more of this kind of generalship been employed it would have been the means of shortening the issue and saving many lives in the Philippines.
