Bodies of Franz Frahr and Wife Found Today.

Their Skulls Were Crushed With a Hammer - Found Buried in a Shed in Rear of Their Residence.

Buffalo, Dec. 3.—The police this morning discovered the bodies of Franz Frahr and his wife buried in a shed in the rear of their residence, from which they mysteriously disappeared on November 30th. Their skulls were crushed with a hammer, which was afterwards found in the shed.

A search for Chas. Bonier, who moved into the house the day after the Frahrs disappeared, resulted in his arrest at Erie this morning.

Frahr and his wife are past eighty years of age. The supposition of the detectives is that Bonier murdered them to gain possession of the property. Bonier, when arrested, claimed to have bought the property from the old couple, paying therefor $3200. He exhibits a deed bearing the Frahrs' signature, but the money is not located.

Detectives are working on the theory that the signature was a forgery and Bonier is guilty of the murder.

In Memoriam

Mrs. M. A. Hunsaker died at her home in Eugene, Saturday evening, November 28, 1903, of diabetes, aged 71 years, 7 months and 8 days.

Mary A. Luce was born in Muhlenburg county, Kentucky, April 20, 1832. With her parents at the age of eight she moved to Iowa, where they settled on a part of the now prosperous city of Okaloosa. Was married there at the age of nineteen to A. J. Campbell. With her relatives they came across the plains to Oregon in 1852. And on that long trip of five months' duration she walked not a little part of the way carrying her firstborn infant. They spent the first winter on the Molalla, Clackamas county, then in 1853 came to Lane county, settling on a place twelve miles west of Eugene. Moved to Eugene in 1859. Her husband died in 1871, and she married Dr. J. L. Herbold in 1874, then J. T. Hunsaker of Oregon City in 1878. Resided at Oregon City, Portland and Woodburn till 1890, when she moved back to Eugene, her home till death. She was the mother of seven sons, five of whom survive her, W. T., J. R., I. L., and E. L. Campbell, and Fred D. Herbold. Two are dead, H. C. in infancy and Eugene a few years ago.

She joined the Eugene Baptist church in the sixties, but of late years failing health made attendance impossible.

The funeral took place from her late residence, Ninth and Olive streets, Monday afternoon, at 2 o'clock with the I. O. O. F. cemetery, Rev. H. A. Green of the Baptist church conducting the services.

The writer would feel himself lacking not only in filial devotion but in justice to the dead did he not bear witness to her splendid womanhood and weave a wreath of homage to her memory. As a mother not only in the period of her children's development but in their well being. And it was not different when years had wrinkled the once smooth face, dimmed the bright eye, and thinned her wealth of hair. Her life was one of abnegation of self.

Though past three score and ten her mind never appreciably failed. To the day of her fatal illness she read the daily papers, not though as they are generally read. For several months her eyes had failed her so even the skill of the oculist could no longer give her the pleasure of reading the body of a newspaper, but with the aid of a handglass she carefully scanned the headlines. Not even a suggestion of second childhood came to mar the pleasure of her old age. She loved birds, plants and flowers, much of her time when well, and in the season, being spent with her flowers. And she was generous with her floral treasures, cutting them freely for the sick and less fortunate. To her outdoor life may be attributed her age, as she had more than her share of ill health.

As her constant companion during the declining years of her life—not as the trust and confidence of childhood but with the discernment of mature manhood—I call her blessed. There is no heaven but has a part for her.
