STANDARD OIL CASE IS HARD FOUGHT BY BOTH SIDES

Admission of Old Deposition of John D. Rockefeller Caused Sharp Legal Argument in Which Prosecution Won Contention—Prosecutor Phelps Scored the Corporation Severely—Administration Defers For Present Its General Attack on Trust Because of Pending Elections

Findlay, O., Oct. 10.—Upon the opening of court in the Standard Oil Co. case this morning the jury was excused while the attorneys argued upon the admissibility of the answers to questions put to John D. Rockefeller in former contempt proceedings. The prosecution held that Rockefeller's statements were pertinent to the present issue to show his connection with the Standard.

Rockefeller's answers in question were taken in 1898 and the defense fought the admission of the depositions. The court admitted them, however, as evidence to show that a trust existed at the time the depositions were made. Judge Banker asked Kline, attorney for the defense, if the acts of the president wouldn't show the methods of the company. Kline said "no."

During the argument Phelps, for the state, said the corporation has no face, except a false face used as a mantle to cover the individuals in it. When the president speaks from behind the mask he speaks as the corporation itself. An adjournment was taken for lunch, the court instructing the jury to read no newspaper accounts of the trial.

The introduction of documentary evidence will be continued tomorrow, the state using no witnesses before tomorrow.

MRS. DUTTS IS ON HAND.
Rockefeller's nemesis, Ida M. Dutt, daughter of the late George M. Rice, is present at the trial. Rice was an independent refiner who was ruined by the Standard, and his daughter has devoted her life to fighting the trust, taking up the battle where her father left it at his death. She will be the star witness for the prosecution, and present incriminating documents gathered by her father and herself.

WILL ATTEMPT TO STAMP OUT LAWLESSNESS

San Francisco, Oct. 10.—On account of the inability of the police to suppress the wave of lawlessness now sweeping over the city the building trades' council today decided to equip 150 able bodied men and turn them over to the city for police duty. The movement toward the organization of a vigilance committee is also growing, the holding up of two young girls on Tuesday having increased the indignation of the people. For the first time in many days no holdups have been reported in the past 24 hours.
