

ORCHARD TELLS STORY OF STUENENBURG MURDER ON STAND

FURNITURE DEALERS OF NORTHWEST ARE INDICTED

Portland, June 5.—In the United States district court today indictments were returned against one hundred and eighty furniture dealers of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and California for alleged violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The list includes practically every manufacturer and jobber in the states named, and a large number of retailers, and involves practically the membership of five furniture associations: The Northwest Furniture Exchange, the Northwest Retail Furniture Dealers' Protective Association, the Oregon Retail Dealers' Furniture Association, and the Lewiston Furniture Club, of Lewiston, Idaho.

The charge preferred in the indictment is conspiracy in restraint of trade.

(At the present time no Eugene dealers are members of any of these associations, although at one time there were two or three here who belonged to the Oregon Retail Dealers' Association.)

DECIDE TO FORCE HARRIMAN INTO THE COURTS

Washington, June 4.—The question as to whether the government will enter on criminal prosecution against E. H. Harriman, the railroad magnate, for violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, was considered at a conference between President Roosevelt and F. K. Lane, of the interstate commerce commission, at the White House tonight. Mr. Lane was with the president for more than an hour and upon leaving the White House announced that before July 1 legal proceedings would be instituted to compel Harriman to answer certain questions propounded to him by members of the commission at the recent hearing in New York, when the Alton deal was under consideration.

ASSASSIN'S CRIME STORY IMPLICATING WESTERN FEDERATION OF MINERS

Boise, June 5.—The first witness called this morning was J. M. Bruzwell, a hotel proprietor of Nampa, Idaho, who identified the names of Thomas Hogan and John L. Simpkins on his hotel register in November, 1905.

A. Hinkley and J. A. Conners, hotel keepers at Nampa and Silver City, established the presence of Simpkins in their respective cities in November, 1905.

C. H. Wentz, bookkeeper of a mining company at Wallace, Idaho, formerly in a bank at Wardner, identified the photograph of Simpkins and his signature in the various hotel registers.

Guy Feight, of Nampa, told of seeing Orchard and Simpkins in company at Caldwell, prior to the assassination of Governor Steunenberg.

Defendant Hayward took the testimony down in a book during the examination of witnesses today.

Harry Orchard was then called to the stand.

until 1902, later returning to Utah and Idaho.

The Vindicator Explosion
He reached Cripple Creek in July, 1902, retaining his membership in the union and working in the Vindicator mine, leaving there during the strike. He remained in the vicinity nearly a year. He was offered $200 by President Davis, of his union, to blow up the mine, and engaged with a companion named Scholtz to do so, and fired a couple of shots at a man running the cage, but could not find the right opportunity and came out of the mine. He made a second attempt which was successful, and Superintendent McCormick and Shift Boss Melback were killed.

Next Orchard went to Denver to see Moyer and Haywood, president and secretary of the Western Federation, who commended him for blowing up the mine as a "fine piece of work."

Moyer gave him $20 and Haywood $200 for blowing up the mine.

Orchard returned to Cripple Creek in 1903, and since then had not done any labor.

Two men, Parker and Davis, were arrested for blowing up the Vindicator mine. Parker and Davis had planned to wreck a train carrying "scabs" and invited Orchard to participate, but he went to the railroad people and told of the plot.

He told of several meetings with Moyer.

Court then took a recess for lunch.

ORCHARD'S RECITAL OF HIS AWFUL CRIMES

Orchard was well groomed and apparently as composed as any one of his hearers as he told the story of his life.

His true name, he said, is Alfred Horsely, and he was born in Northumberland county, Canada, 41 years ago. He assumed the name of Orchard eleven years ago, when he came to the United States in 1896 and went to Spokane, thence to Wallace, Idaho, and to Burke, where he engaged in the wood and coal business, which he sold out in 1899, when he went to work in the mines, becoming a member of the Western Federation of Miners.

In the course of his recital he was interrupted by many objections from the defense, which were overruled.

Orchard's sworn story was a blood-curdling recital of conspiracy and assassination. He told the story of the blowing up of the Sullivan and Bunker Hill mines at Wardner, which he declared was the result of a federation plot, after which the Couer d'Alene troubles were suppressed by Governor Steunenberg. After the arrival of the federal troops in Idaho Orchard went to Montana for two weeks, thence to Utah to work in the Ben Butler mine, and in 1900 to California and Arizona, where he worked at the Vindicator mine, leaving there during the strike. He remained in the vicinity nearly a year. He was offered $200 by President Davis, of his union, to blow up the mine, and engaged with a companion named Scholtz to do so, and fired a couple of shots at a man running the cage, but could not find the right opportunity and came out of the mine. He made a second attempt which was successful, and Superintendent McCormick and Shift Boss Melback were killed.

Tried to Kill Peabody.
After luncheon Orchard resumed his story and told of a meeting with Haywood and Pettibone in Denver. They asked him to fix up a scheme to assassinate Governor Peabody. Accordingly Orchard arranged to hide behind a wall near Peabody's residence and shoot him. A man named Adams was assigned to help him, Pettibone giving them sawed off shotguns to shoot Peabody with. They followed Peabody three weeks at one time but failed to kill him because the governor was accompanied by a lady. Later Orchard and his companion were to assassinate Lyte Gregory, deputy sheriff, who was "against us." Orchard fired at Gregory one night and believes he killed him.

His act was approved by the federation officials. He had been getting money right along from the federation.

Attorney Hawley being unwell, the court adjourned until tomorrow, at

FAIRBANKS HAS CORNERED STORY

Indianapolis, Ind., June 4.—Not a copy of Collier's nor a copy of the Saturday Evening Post can be secured in this city. Persons interested in the article regarding Vice President Fairbanks, which appeared in these two publications, which reached here on Saturday, have been making the rounds of the hotels and newsstands, but it is impossible to get a copy of either publication. The thing is unprecedented in this city, as both periodicals have always been on the newsstands for days and even weeks after publication. The thing is unprecedented in this city, as both periodicals have always been on the newsstands for days and even weeks after publication.

It is said that the local notice of the appearance of the two articles aroused the friends of Vice President Fairbanks, and that as soon as the periodicals arrived they went in force to the hotels and newsdealers and bought up every copy that came to the city, except such as were ordered in advance by regular patrons.
