IMMENSE TIMBER DEAL REPORTED

Current rumor has it that the C. A. Smith Lumber company, which is now constructing a mill with a capacity of 250,000 feet daily on Isthmus Slough, a tributary to Coos Bay, is about to purchase the Gardiner Mill company's holdings in Douglas county, says the Coos Bay Times. The deal, if consummated, will be one of the biggest transactions ever carried through in this section of the coast country.

Along the Umpqua and Smith rivers the Gardiner Mill company controls thousands of acres of rich timber land with the present holdings in Coos county the new purchase will give the C. A. Smith company almost a corner on the timber supply in this

LOGGERS HERE almost use

Some of the loggers up the river fear that the recent abandonment of the camps on Puget Sound and the Columbia will flood the Willamette camps with loggers, which will bring the wages down lower. They say that once a logger always a logger, and that the men discharged there will not do anything else.

As perhaps 20,000 men thrown out of employment, there seems to be plenty of justification for the belief that there may be an overflow of men in the Upper Willamette logging enterprises

Though, it is said, that these men will not go to work in the harvest fields or do railroad work, it is bound to crowd out those who are not confirmed loggers, and will help to fill the ranks of laborers in Lane county.
