GOVERNOR TRYING TO RESCIND HIS HOLIDAY DECREE

Portland, Oct. 30.—The banks opened for business today on the clearing house certificate plan. Owing to the action of the banks and the fact that the courts and offices of record must remain closed following his proclamation, the governor is searching the statutes to ascertain his powers with a view to rescinding his holiday proclamation.

But one bank, the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, failed to open. Its president, J. Thornburn Ross, deciding that the institution would take advantage of the governor's holiday proclamation and remain closed until Monday. The Title Guarantee is not a member of the clearing house association, but the association guaranteed to extend to it all clearing house privileges, including the backing of clearing house certificates.

The banks of Eugene reopened for business at 9 o'clock, although the sign, "Bank closed, legal holiday," was hung on the front door of each. The officials of the bank explained that the institutions were opened for the accommodation of their patrons and only a limited amount of business is being done. Deposits are being received, but no checks are cashed except upon urgent necessity. The officials state that just as soon as the governor's holiday expires the banks will re-open for the transaction of business as before and that they feel no uneasiness on account of the present financial condition in the city.
