TWENTY-SEVEN KNOWN TO HAVE PERISHED AND FIRES STILL RAGE

Alpena, Mich., Oct. 17.—With twenty-seven known to have perished in the Presque Isle country the forest fires are still raging uncontrolled in the counties of Cheboygan, Presque Isle, Alpena, Alcona and other scattered districts of Northern Michigan. Diligent search was begun today to determine the full extent of the holocaust, but it may take many days to reveal the [illegible] likely to have occurred on isolated farms.

The property loss is already up in the millions. Whole [illegible] logging camps by villages have been blotted off the map and the dozen destroyed with their season's output.

FEAR FOR SAFETY OF FLEET TENDER YANKTON

Tokio, Oct. 17.—Up to 8 o'clock tonight no message was received from the tender Yankton. It was expected to enter the harbor last night, but has not been sighted by any craft plying along the coast. Some uneasiness is felt at the possibility of her having been disabled in the recent storm.

Tokio, Oct. 17.—The official reception committee, headed by Vice-Admiral Saito, who is vice minister of the navy department, will leave early Sunday morning for Yokohama to present an address of welcome to Admiral Sperry. The battleship fleet is expected to arrive at 9 o'clock Sunday morning. Yokohama is crowded with visiting Japanese and other foreigners, and every house, however poor, is decorated in honor of the visitors. The display on the more pretentious buildings is little short of magnificent.

Fleet in Storm.

Tokio, Oct. 17.—The delay of the American battleship fleet in arriving at Yokohama is due to a tremendous storm off the North coast island of Luzon of a Philippine group. The storm began the morning of October 12, continued until the afternoon of the 13th. One man was drowned and some damage resulted to the fleet. These details were communicated to the Associated Press at Tokio by wireless from the Connecticut through special courtesy of the Japanese government. The fleet will arrive at Yokohama at 9 o'clock of the morning of October 18.

PUGET SOUND VESSELS INJURED IN COLLISION

Seattle, Oct. 17.—The schooner Bainbridge, on her way to Port Blakely to load lumber, was injured in a collision with the steamship Cottage City off Jefferson Head last night. The tug Tyee was towing the schooners Bainbridge and Blakely at the time of the accident.

The upper works of the Bainbridge was carried away and the Tyee proceeded to Port Blakely with her in tow.

The Cottage City was towed to Seattle by the steamboat Whatcom, and her damage was confined to the upper works. An unidentified Italian in the steerage of the Cottage City sustained a fractured leg, and several persons lost their belongings. Purser Jones was thrown into the water but was rescued.

The accident was the result of the Cottage City jamming her rudder ropes and she could not be controlled.

KILLED WOMAN; FAILED TO SHOOT HIMSELF FATALLY

San Francisco, Cal., Oct. 17.—Asserting that she was responsible for his wife leaving him, Michael Borsos, with a revolver in each hand, rushed to the Brown Palace rooming house today and shot Mrs. Augusta Towle through the head, killing her instantly. He then fired two more shots into the prostrate body on the floor and turned the weapon upon himself, but his aim was bad, and the injury may not prove fatal. He ran from the house and was captured by a policeman named Heard, who fired a shot over the fugitive's head. Borsos immediately surrendered.

Turkey Has Mobilized Army Corps for Offensive Move

Paris, Oct. 17.—The French foreign office has official confirmation of the previous reports of the mobilization by Turkey of the Anatolian army corps. This is regarded in official circles as Turkey's answer to Bulgaria's refusal to accord compensation for the Oriental railroad, and is believed to make war inevitable.

HON. JOHN BARRETT ADDRESSES EUGENE CITIZENS

(From Thursday's Daily).

Hon. John Barrett, director of the bureau of American republics, spoke to over six hundred students and townspeople in Villard Hall at the University last night. His subject was: "What the Pacific Has in Store for the State and the People of Oregon." He said in part:

"There are three reasons why I am proud to address you tonight. First, as one who has kept his residence in this State for nearly twenty years, since I first came west from New England. I am proud to have the opportunity of meeting my fellow citizens whom I have always tried to represent faithfully as their minister abroad or as their officer at Washington. Second, as the head of a great international institution devoted to the development of comity and friendship among American nations. I am proud to be able to interest you in [illegible] work, which can do so much not only to [illegible] of this State but of the entire country. Third, as one who believes that Oregon can play just as important a part as any other state of the Union in shaping both national and international affairs, I am proud to point out to you ways and means by which Oregon may be recognized not only at home but abroad as one of the leading states of the Union.

EDWARD A. DILLON.

Captain of the Princeton football team of 1908, who won fame as a quarterback last year.

"Before, however, I proceed any further, permit me to make a personal statement which may cause you to give more heed to what I say than you otherwise would. Some of my fellow citizens in Oregon have seen fit to intimate that I am not to be classed as a real Oregonian, because of the fact that I had been absent from the state so much of the time during the last fifteen years. Now my answer is, that I should be regarded as all the more entitled to full credit as an Oregonian because such absence has been entirely in the service of the state and the nation, in a constant effort to build up our prestige, influence, and commerce abroad. Had I stayed at home, I could not have accomplished one hundredth part as much for Oregon and the country in general. Oregon has just as much right to a voice in the administration of our foreign affairs as she has in our internal administration, and it certainly is not possible for an Oregonian to go abroad in a diplomatic position or hold a high administrative office in Washington, and at the same time remain within the confines of his State. No, I contest with any man in Oregon a clearer right to be called a citizen of this great commonwealth.

Tonight I shall present to you some new and important facts within the scope of my subject: "What the Pacific Ocean has in store for Oregon." During the last ten years nearly all the discussion here and throughout the United States regarding the Pacific, has concerned our opportunities and responsibilities in Japan, China, the Philippines, and the rest of the Orient. That is a magnificent field, and we should be unremitting in our efforts to develop our commerce with it. There are several hundreds of millions of people just across the ocean from us, and their total foreign trade amounts to two billions of loddars, ($2,000,000,000) per annum, of which the share of the United States is yet altogether too small, but the Orient presents problems of competition, labor, manufacture, and of conditios of demand and supply, the solution of which, and the effects thereof, no man can now foretell.

In contrast to this vast Oriental field, I desire to call your attention to the greater and more pleasing opportunities appealing to the United States in the twenty ambitious republics just south of us. We have been so occupied here on this coast with the study of the Orient, and they have been so taken up on the Atlantic coast with watching Europe, that our whole country has neglected the one splendid field and market in the wide world which should be ours above all others. In this connection let me point out to you some salient but generally unappreciated facts.

These twenty nations, with governments akin to ours, with constitutions modelled after ours, with similar ambitions and views, have an area of nine millions of square miles, or three time greater than that of the United States, exclusive of Alaska. Expressed otherwise, an area into which could be place all of China, Japan, the Philippines, Korea, Siam, and a large part of India and Siberia. This great area supports a population as yet of only seventy millions of people, but this population conducts an annual trade of two billions, one hundred millions of dollars, ($2,100,000,000), or twice that of China [illegible] combined, which have a [illegible] over four hundred total population [illegible] least near the Argentine Republic, [illegible] in the south temperate zone of South America, and having a population of only six millions of people, carried on a foreign trade of nearly six hundred millions of dollars, ($600,000,000), or a total greater than that of Japan with forty millions of people or of China with three hundred and fifty millions. I make this comparison with full respect for Japan and China. I admire Japan for her wonderful record and China for her remarkable characteristics, but I am trying to impress upon you that, at the same time we are doing everything we can to promote our commerce and friendship with the Orient we should not neglect our own sister republics.

"The figures I have just given you apply to the entire twenty republics of Latin America, reaching from Cuba and Mexico south to Argentina and Chile. Now let me emphasize the importance of the twelve republics bordering on the Pacific ocean and therefore our close neighbors. They include Mexico, Guatamala, Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Columbia, Ecudor, Peru, Bolivia and Chile, having a coast line on the Pacific of nearly six thousand miles and already having a population of twenty millions of people, or nearly five times that of our three Pacific Coast states of California, Oregon and Washington. Although they are in the infancy of their material development and their coasts have been isolated from Europe and our Atlantic coast, they conduct an annual foreign trade valued at the splendid total of six hundred and fifty millions of dollars, ($650,000,000). Certainly such facts as these demonstrate their importance but yet our country, and particularly this coast, has done too little to get into closer touch with this section of the western hemisphere.

"If you were to make a journey down the west coast of Mexico, Central America and South America you would be astonished at the evidence everywhere of material progress and development. It is no exaggeration to predict that during the next twenty years this part of the world will have an onward movement that will astonish everybody. There is a field for the investment of hundreds of millions of dollars. Railroads must be built in the interiors. Mines must be opened up. Agricultural sections must be populated and irrigated. New towns must be built. The numerous harbors and ports must be dredged. Immigration must be encouraged and transportation facilities improved. While these things are being done, as they surely will be before or soon after the completion of the Panama Canal, Oregon and the entire Pacific coast should be acquainting themselves with this field, developing friendly relations with it, studying the demand and supply of its markets, its buying and selling capacity, and, in short, ways and means of bringing about mutual benefits alike to the North and the South American Pacific Coast.

"At the Trans-Mississippi Congress recently held in San Francisco, I had the honor to propose that there should be held on this coast next year a Pan-American Pacific Commercial Conference, to which should be invited representative business men from the twelve Pacific Coast countries of Latin America. For the success of such a meeting Oregon should co-operate with California and Washington. When the delegates come, representing as they will their governments and peoples, they will want to know what we can do here and what we have to sell. They must be taken on a journey of inspection to all parts of the Pacific Coast, and such a journey must include a trip through Oregon and a visit to your own progressive city of Eugene.

"Let me prophesy, with full confidence, that the next ten years are going to be a Latin American decade, when all the world will stand in wonder before the progress of our sister republics. As an Oregonian, I want to see our state one of the first to recognize the importance of this field and so gain the moral prestige and commercial advantage that will come therefrom. As akin to this thought, I want the State of Oregon and your city, to take particular interest in the work of the International Bureau of American Republics, not only because I, as an Oregonian, am at the head of it, but because it can provide you with a vast amount of information concerning these southern republics. This Bureau can show you that South America has a city, Buenos Aires, the capital of the Argentine Republic, with a population of one million, two hundred thousand persons, which is growing faster than any city in the United States with the exception of New York and Chicago; that you could put the entire area of the United States, not including Alaska, into the Republic of Brazil, and still have room left over for an extra Oregon and Washington; that out of the Amazon River every day flows three times as much water as out of the Mississippi and Columbia combined; that the South American governments expended more money last year for improvement of Rivers and Harbors than did the United States, and that the Panama canal will accomplish benefits alike for the west coast of North and South America which will usher in a new era of Pan-American commerce and friendship."

Increased Appropriation.

In regard to education, the work with which Mr. Barrett is so intimately connected, as one of his duties is to teach the people of the United States the vast possibilities of the countries of the Southland, he said that the University of Oregon should receive an appropriation of $250,000 a year. Incidentally he compared American Universities with those of South America, presenting the fact that in Peru before Harvard was founded, there was a University a hundred years old with a thousand students.

Football Cup.

To stimulate the rivalry among the three state Universities of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, he announced that he had arranged for the offering of a cup to be contested for among the three institutions by their football teams. The team winning the undisputed championship twice will become sole owner of the trophy, and thus making it possible that the rivalry will last for over four years. Any team winning a temporary title once shall be entitled to keep it in possession for a year.

Mr. Barrett before taking his present post as Director General of the International Bureau of American Republics, to which he was elected by the unanimous vote of the twenty-one American Republics, including the United States, has served as United States minister to Siam, in Asia, and to Argentine, Panama, and Columbia, in Latin America. He has also filled the positions of Commissioner of Commerce to China, Japan, Korea and the Philippines, and Commissioner General of Foreign Affairs of the St. Louis Exposition. His official residence is in Washington, D. C., but his legal residence is in Portland, Oregon, where he came from Vermont in the late fall of 1889. He was for several years associate editor of the Evening Telegram of Portland, and held that position when he was appointed to his first diplomatic post in 1894, on the combined endorsement of California, Oregon, and Washington, regardless of political party.

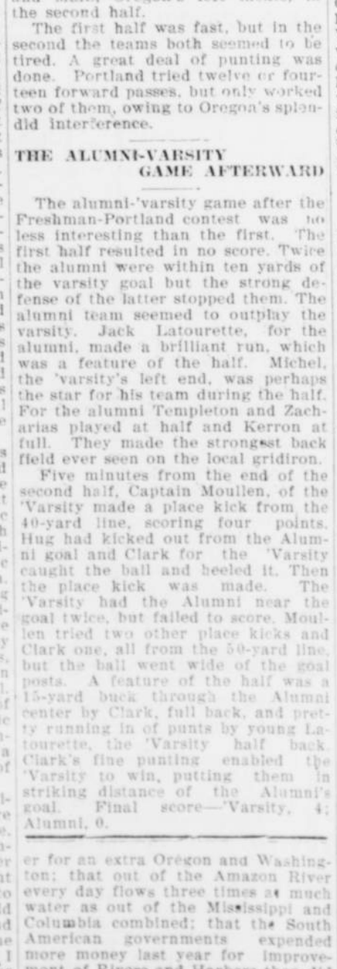
OREGON FRESHMEN WIN GAME FROM PORTLAND HIGH

First Game.
Oregon Freshmen	5
Portland High	0
Second Game.
'Varsity	4
Alumni	0

(From Saturday's Daily Guard.)

The University of Oregon freshmen won from the Portland high school in the first game of the matinee on Kincaid field this afternoon by the score of 5 to 0. The touchdown was made in the middle of the first half. The freshmen carried the ball by off tackle plays and short end runs for 70 yards, when McKinley, the fullback, was sent over the line for a touchdown. Goal was missed.

In the second half Portland high had two chances to score from the 25-yard line, but the strong defense [illegible] of the Oregon freshman line invariably stopped them. Features of the game were the playing of Ludlum, Portland's left end, of McKinley and Latourette, of Oregon, in the first half, and of Hixon, Oregon's left end, and Main, Oregon's left tackle, in the second half.



GEORGE WALDERS.

Captain of the Cornell football team of 1908, who was one of the star players in the "[illegible]ing five" last season.

The first half was fast, but in the second the teams both seemed to be tired. A great deal of punting was done. Portland tried twelve or fourteen forward passes, but only worked two of them, owing to Oregon's splendid interference.

THE ALUMNI-VARSITY GAME AFTERWARD

The alumni-'varsity game after the Freshman-Portland contest was no less interesting than the first. The first half resulted in no score. Twice the alumni were within ten yards of the varsity goal but the strong defense of the latter stopped them. The alumni team seemed to outplay the varsity. Jack Latourette, for the alumni, made a brilliant run, which was a feature of the half. Michel, the 'varsity's left end, was perhaps the star for his team during the half. For the alumni Templeton and Zacharias played at half and Kerron at full. They made the strongest back field ever seen on the local gridiron.

Five minutes from the end of the second half, Captain Moullen, of the 'Varsity made a place kick from the 40-yard line, scoring four points. Hug had kicked out from the Alumni goal and Clark for the 'Varsity caught the ball and heeled it. Then the place kick was made. The 'Varsity had the Alumni near the goal twice, but failed to score. Moullen tried two other place kicks and Clark one, all from the 50-yard line, but the ball went wide of the goal posts. A feature of the half was a 15-yard buck through the Alumni center by Clark, full back, and pretty running in of punts by young Latourette, the 'Varsity half back. Clark's fine punting enabled the 'Varsity to win, putting them in striking distance of the Alumni's goal. Final score—'Varsity, 4; Alumni, 0.

THE COUNTRY GIRL IN TOWN.

She is coming to the city—alone.

In the country nothing occurs. Life is about the same every day. And the girl has not yet learned that the greatest boon in life is to be content and that the quiet places are the best.

It is the monotony that tires her, she thinks. The same faces are to be seen at the church every Sunday and at the picnics. She knows this one as "Bill" and that one as "Sarah." Familiarity has bred contempt. And over all the countryside is the never varying look of things. The familiar has grown trite and finally distasteful.

But yonder in the city!

Ah, everything happens in the city! There are plenty of new faces there. The scenes change like those of a kaleidoscope. Lots of new sensations in the city! Its air is tonic. Surely life must be fuller there.

The girl is young and innocent. In her inexperience she dreams fanciful dreams. Perhaps she is ambitious to get on in the world, or impatient of restraint, or she is lured by the glamour of the town. She does not realize how safe is the sheltered life she has always lived in the quiet neighborhood.

Poor girl!

She does not realize the fact that her very virtues under strong temptation may lead to her betrayal of herself. She does not appreciate the fact that her very gentleness of nature prevents her bringing to bear upon the deceitful tempter the force of such which the sophisticated can summon to their aid. She does not know her own weaknesses.

Poor lassie!

Her loving disposition does not hardly know how to deny. Her sweet unselfishness scarcely is able to refuse. Every best quality of her being may lead to her undoing.

Because—

Where the defenseless chicken strays, over that place circles the cruel hawk and swoops upon his prey.

Poor girl!

If she falls into the wrong set of associates and there is no one by her side to warn and guide, God help the child!

If, on the other hand, she is strong of character, wary, capable of rounding and self reliant, she will take care of herself and rise above the unfavorable events of temptation.

But if not—
