Boiling the molasses used in making gingerbread improves it.
A cut lemon rubbed into the roots of the hair will destroy dandruff.

The great point in cooking a potato, by whatever method, is to know when it is done.

Lime juice diluted in two-thirds of water, or rock salt and water, will harden the muscles and make a healthy looking skin.

To give an appetizing flavor to a broiled beefsteak cut an onion in half and rub it over the hot platter with the melted butter.

In making a meringue allow one tablespoonful of powdered sugar to each white egg, stiffly beaten, then cook very slowly in a cool oven.

To keep the teeth clear from tartar, rinse the mouth each morning with tepid water into which a little toilet water has been dropped.

Chemists say that it takes more than twice as much sugar to sweeten preserves and sauces if put in when they begin to cook as it does if the sugar is added after the cooking is done.

After a day's work at anything that requires long standing, bathe the feet in warm water, and then sponge them thoroughly with alcohol. That tired feeling will disappear as if by magic.

Almond meal greatly softens and whiten the skin. Put it in a bag of nun's veiling or soft bunting and use it like soap when bathing. Afterward the skin should be bathed with clear and almost cold water.

THE LATE HENRY H. ROGERS, STANDARD OIL MULTIMILLIONAIRE.

Henry H. Rogers, vice president of the Standard Oil company and the active head of that corporation until the time of his sudden death in New York city, was born at Fairhaven, Mass., in 1840. After leaving the local high school he sold newspapers on the streets for a time, so ambitious was he to be employed. Later he worked in a store for $3 a week, and still later he was a train baggageman on the branch road that ran through his home town. In the early sixties he entered the oil business in Pennsylvania, and from then his rise to fortune was rapid. His closest friend was Mark Twain, and he and the famous humorist made many yacht cruises together.

FADS AND FASHIONS

(Guard Social Service)

New York, May 29.—The newest lines which dressmakers are following at the present are running in two different directions as regards bodices. Some of the latest models are very long-waisted while others have the modified short length. Both plait and gathers are now seen at the top of the back of skirt mounts at the smartest dressmakers, giving naturally an easy fall of skirt drapery, which at the bottom of the skirt means an increase in width. This will be welcome to those not only opposed to the scant skirts, but anxious to make use of some of their last summer's costumes.

Sleeves in general are long and tight fitting, but one also sees a tight-fitting over-sleeve that reaches from the shoulder to the wrist, but it is cut up into a round opening or square one on the outside arm. For this summer over-sleeves will show a sleeve of net, mousseline being in full vogue.

Drape princess tunics on the bias are among the latest creations. They allow the waist line to be naturally placed and closely mold the figure with much grace. Fine striped fabrics are used effectively. They fasten on one shoulder and on the under seam of the sleeve attached to the same side. Panel tunics, these long silk fringed trim the bottom of the panel, are exceedingly smart and so are stole tunics the stole being a marvel of richness in handwork, in soutache on net, embroidery, in painted mousseline or bead work.

The petticoated walking skirt of two and one half yards of width proved highly unsatisfactorily during the past winter season. It catches up the dust on the heels and no plait skirt ever did, and it wraps about the knees and ankles every fourth step, as if one was encased in a tube. A most charming modification of this skirt is one that breaks with a small group of wide plaits at the middle of the front and back. A broad embroidered girde binds the line in a straight band, fastening in front with slide and one long blunt end of the embroidered stuff that hangs heavy between the ankles. The long-waisted corsage is laid in small flat side plaits, also at the center of the front and back, starting at the embroidered band that encircles the round neck. This gown in linen or tulle gives the straight effect desired and yet plenty of room for walking.

Blouses for summer wear have come from Paris recently in a large variety of styles and there are so many charming patterns among the models shown that it is difficult to choose. Cotton voile leads as a material among the lace trimmed blouses, and sheer linen seems to be a Parisian favorite for the tailored model, which, with the French is never stiffened. The more simple models have been developed in striped as well as plain material. The pin stripe in linen lawn is positively fascinating for wear with the linen suit when it repeats the gown's color. Striped voile is a favorite, and sheer batistes in delicate shades vie with colored handkerchief linens.

Valenciennes and Irish crochet are the popular laces. Hand-tucks and hand embroidered are favored beyond all other trimming methods. Always popular in Paris are the models with pleated frills down one side of the front. Some of them an insertion of lace, others are hem-stitched, and the more expensive are hand-scalloped. The French blouse-maker she ever so humble, realizes the full value of the shoulder strap, whether it be plain or tuckled, or a mere band of lace or embroidery. Its advantages are evident to the home sewer at a glance. It tends to give firmness at the straining point and it joins the front and back artistically by concealing the fact that the tucks do not accurately hit in the joining. The long sleeve on the newest blouses shows the tailored cuff with or without the frill, although the leg-of-mutton is not passed. Some of the three-quarter sleeves are gathered into a lace frill at the lower edge, while the others slash the lace and tucks as a part of a fitted sleeve.

Dutch necks are much in evidence among the blouses, just as they are among the gowns, and the stock that fastened at the back is shown with out even the suggestion of a jabot or with a narrow black velvet cravat.

The blouses shown in the shops include every variety, from the plain and almost severely made blouse for business women to the most extravagantly decorated blouse which may be worn for certain society functions during the hot season.

A coat and skirt of linen of medium dark shade, with half a dozen blouses of fine, soft texture, make an ideal business outfit for wear in the city, where light frocks are not in vogue for the street wear, except on scorching hot days. The linen suit, however, requires frequent attention with the pressing iron, even if it is dark enough in color not to soil easily, and if the business girl cannot have the use of a hot iron at any time she will do wisely to have her hot weather suit of light English, which is very cool and also sheds the dust satisfactorily. A navy blue or gray mohair coat and skirt suit will be a wise choice and the coat should be lined with the thinnest China silk or with dotted foulard.

The only objection to the coat and skirt suit is that the coat may be worn only with its accompanying skirt, and some business women are welcoming the return of the separate coat or topcoat as it is now called. These coats are being shown in serge, black being the favorite, though many tan covert coats are seen. One model, called the princess, is particularly graceful, having the length and good lines noticeable in this year's models, and the seams, lapped over and buttoned down, another modish style feature.

Very light topcoats reaching to the dress hem are shown in gray mohair and in shepherd checked fabrics, and these coats are a veritable boon to the business woman, for they may be worn to and from business over cool frocks of sheer material on those days of which we have so many, when the sun sulks under lowering clouds, yet the humidity makes anything but the lightest garment intolerable.

Light summer frocks have made necessary the revival of dainty petticoats and they are more beautiful this season than ever before. In the silk skirts only the softest weaves, such as mesaline, chiffon, taffeta, supple satin, silks and silk Jersey are used, the last named, is, of course, employed for the tops of petticoats only. In the shops even accordion-pleated petticoats are shown, plain over the hips and falling in pleats, finished with pinked, box-pleated ruching.

Soft white satin seems to reign supreme among the bridal gowns of this season, though, occasionally, a gown in net, crepe de chine or one of the semi-transparent materials, such as chiffon, voile blanc, etc., is encountered. The sheer frock is very useful in after days, but it has not the distinctive bridal air which tradition has accorded to satin, and taste follows tradition in this instance, for the clinging folds of satin are ideally adapted to the simple graceful lines desirable in the gown.

Bunches of artificial fruit are seen a great deal, made of satin, taffeta and velvet. They are tied to parasol handles, worn in the corsage or pinned around the hat where the veil is lopped off.

White pearl buttons in every variety of carving and some with a Frenchy decoration of gilt lines and flowers are used a great deal this season.

DUKE D'ABRUZZI AND TWO OF HIS MOUNTAIN GUIDES.

Ever since the Duke d'Abuzzi sailed for India to explore the Himalayas mountains there have been reports of the despondency and recklessness of the disappointed sultan of Miss Katherine Elkins. It was stated that on one occasion he attempted to kill himself with a revolver and that his veteran guide, Joseph Petagax, seized the weapon. These stories have created much sympathy for the young nobleman in Italy, and the dowager queen, who is believed to have caused the match to be broken off, is roundly censured.
