BLOOMER GOWN, LATEST FREAK OF PARIS FASHIONS.

Accustomed as Paris is to freaks of fashion, the boulevardiers gasped at sight of the new bloomer gown when Mlle. Suzanne Bergere of the Opera Comique first appeared in it. The Bergere costume is a startling exaggeration of the pantaloon gown which made its appearance some months ago. In fact, Mlle. Bergere's outfit is more of a "they" than an "it," bearing a close resemblance to a pair of ordinary Turkish trousers.

FADS AND FASHIONS

(By Catherine Mann-Payzant).

New York, June 19.—Printed linens are some of the prettiest of summer fabrics. They are very light in weight, fine in their texture and produced in delicate colors with beautiful designs imitated from old chintz and India muslin. It has fairly taken the place held by cretonne last year for hats, it is used for borders on parasols and for collar and cuffs and pocket trimmings on light pongees or linen dust coats.

Dresses of such descriptions should be exceedingly simple, for their patterns and beautiful designs are completely spoiled by fussiness or over elaboration.

A dainty gown of printed linen had a white ground with a most attractive design in blue and pink and brown figures so beautifully blended in faint shades that the crudeness of the sound in description is a surprise. It was one of the most simple constituted frocks I have seen this spring and yet one of the most charming for that reason. It was a jumper dress made in the form of a slip. The skirt was slightly high waisted, opening on the side in front, and made rather more full than some of the recent models have allowed, with two narrow bands of fine white linen to decorate the bottom and give weight.

The jumper-like waist, which also fastens at the left side of the front, is cut in front in a deep rounded V. The cap-sleeves are very short cut with the waist proper. The skirt and waist are joined under a shaped stitched girdle of the plain linen of a quality so fine that it was like a sheer muslin. The hat had a brim of the linen with a fine lace tan crown and bands of the linen with rosettes of the same and a buckle made of tiny rosebuds and forget-me-nots were its decoration. The parasol was of plain white linen with a deep band of the printed linen. White suede shoes, stockings, gloves and a dainty white embroidered bag to be slung over the arm by a white cord chain completed the costume. The original intention of the gown was for a garden party, but for wear in the country it would make a charming frock.

The Dutch neck is seen everywhere and there is no doubt that it will be even more popular during the coming warm months, indeed for all but the dressiest gowns it is like to be the prevailing mode. But for the trim sailor suits the high collars, made of fine thin material, will be most used.

In these days of graduation and confirmation gowns it is interesting to note that bordered muslins are much used and that the lingerie gown is favored, though considered by some as rather too elaborate for very young girls.

Barred net that resembles tucked tulle is used over soft silk slips. This barred tulle and net is one of the popular fancies of the day for yokes and sleeves and chemisettes.

A jumper dress of fine muslin or organdy or muslin or cotton crepe is pretty when finished by the use of net. A frock having a gored circular skirt of plain linen or cotton pongee or foulard with a waist of net or lace and suspender pieces to match the skirt would make a pretty summer gown and should be carried out in the beautifully cut black broach and earrings, giving a most distinguished air.

Bags are often of the same material as the dress with very beautiful chains attached, which often are jeweled, having small links set with stones that either match or have a contrast to the gown.

Embroidered buttons, and crochet and enamel buttons are much used on the new gowns, and many of these are placed in some rims of jet or some metal.

For slight figures beautiful sashes of Brussels net are used and all sorts of new ways of arrangements are sought for while scarfs of net in black or white are used and often make just the needed addition to a gown.

All shades of yellow, maize, cream or champagne (warm) are much used by those who can wear them, all of which need a clear and well-colored complexion. A frock of cream linen had black linings, a yellow crepe had white lace insets and yoke and sleeves of white lace. A maize colored pongee was trimmed with brown velvet ribbon and a hat to match was adorned with just one large dull red rose.

Flazon is a very fine new and sheer material that promises to have something of a vogue this summer. It is sheer cotton made with a linen thread finish. It is to be found in the plain variety as well as the striped plaids, crossbarred and jacquared patterns; many of these, while not so expensive, resemble closely the printed linens.

While not new, the Swiss muslins, which are now to be found with the ombre embroidered designs, make beautiful gowns for the summer season.

One thing is still considered imperative, that the blouse suggests itself as a part of the skirt, and the last is mounted more or less above the waist line. But there is one new note that is probably due to the summer demands that all neck finishes be immaculate, and which it is so hard to obtain with dark neck finishes. No matter of what material, the blouse, if transparent, is made over a white lining that is allowed to mount up into a guimpe above a round or square opening. It is the plan of the nice dressing idea to have all these neck and sleeve finishes removable, and each dress is likely to have several steps.

Up to the present the tailored suits, which are very elaborate to what was once considered appropriate for such costumes, has been more in evidence than any other style except for indoor wear. But as the weather becomes warmer a dress that is neither a tailored suit or a dressy affair is seen, and they are in a particular class by themselves, made necessary by the heat of the American climate. There are weeks here that a tailored suit or fussy gown cannot be worn with comfort, and for that reason the linen (the heaviest weight that can be worn), the chambray, the zephyr, and the cotton imitations of the wool goods are most worn and are made up in the same style often as the regulation tailor made gown. A blue and white cotton cheviot that was the exact reproduction of the wool original, was made by a first class tailor with the same correct finish as he would have put on the wool gown, and the whole dress in princess style and jumper dress are those most frequently seen for ordinary wear. The tailored linen is par excellence the dress for summer traveling and should be in a dark shade.

Often a much needed article is the light weight coat for evening and early mornings, and some of those seen in the various silks with or without linings. At the pony races at Cedarhurst a costume consisting of blue satin cloth skirt made with a high waisted skirt and short braided waist so fashionable just now, was completed by a coat of heavy rough finished Shantung with a tiny fold of white and gold silk just inside the collar to take the place of the vest.

Jet is having a decided vogue just at present not only for morning but with other costumes, for instance a blue suit had no color to relieve it in its development but a chain of black jet.

HARTOG SAYS SEATTLE FAIR IS SUCCESS

Manager Hartog, of the Commercial Club, returned from Seattle and Portland this morning. He reports the A.-Y.-P. fair a success and that the Oregon building receives a great many visitors. He made some needed changes in the Eugene exhibit and entered a complaint in regard to the best display, as no facilities have gee ngiven Mr. Warren to put his fruit in presentable shape. Also in regard to the absence of Eugene slides in the illustrated lecture. The Commercial Club several months ago sent the negatives to Portland for these slides and thus far only one Eugene slide is ready. While he was conferring with Secretary Wisdom about this matter, three more slides arrived, but all University scenes. Mr. Wisdom stated that the delay was the fault of the Kaiser Company, who are making the slides.

Mr. Warren has a register for visitors and although it had only been open two days, several pages of it were filled, mostly with Eastern names and only three from Eugene. Mr. Warren wants the visitors from Lane county to be sure and sign this register. Additional show cards and labels are needed by him, and these will be gotten up at once.

Mr. Hartog says that the rumor of prices having been raised by the Seattle hotels is a canard, for that at the Washington Annex where he stopped he had a splendid room for $1.50 and excellent meals can be had at from 30 cents up; in fact he got better accommodations at less money that he did before the fair. The manager of the Washington Annex, Mr. Davis spoke about The Guard's party of young ladies coming to his hotel. They certainly have a treat in store for them, Mr. Hartog says, and Mr. Davis promised that he would make it comfortable for them.

Eugene Pictures in East.

While in Portland Mr. Hartog arranged with Wm. McMurray that the S. P. Co. and allied lines will take charge of a framed set of Kaiser hand-painted Lane county views if the board of governors decided to get one made, and without expense to Eugene will exhibit them at the principal cities, Omaha, St. Louis, Kansas City, Chicago and so on. Mr. McMurray has gone to Chicago and the matter will be taken up by him while there with E. L. Lomar, general passenger agent of the S. P. Co. This will put the beautiful views before hundreds of thousands of people and at no cost to the Commercial Club except the cost of the pictures and the framing.

The Portland members of the commencement day committee report that they are meeting with good success and the S. P. Co. has started advertising the excursion in the Portland papers as arranged with Mr. McMurray before his departure.

GOULD DIVORCE CASE CONTINUES

New York, June 17.—The spot light of cross examination continued to oscillate in the Gould divorce case from Castle Gould to the St. Regis hotel to Bluegap, Va., the Gould yacht and to New York again and to intercept for a few moments when it lingered on Dustin Farnum it never got far away from Butler's keys to wine cellar.

All day there was a continuous procession of footmen, chaffeurs, maids, waiters and bell boys on whose testimony it is sought to show Mrs. Gould is an impossible wife, there being only one break in it.

This was Melvin E. Chapman, a broker, who was the guest of Gould's on the yacht Niagara on several cruises in 1905. He had several times seen Mrs. Gould undeniably drunk, and he related the overbearing manner of the wife and the efforts of the husband to sooth her.

There was no abatement of Mrs. Gould's ordeal, and as the burden of reiteration grew heavier she shrank visibly and a look of pain came to her eyes as if she might have read or seen such things, but it was a new realization for her to hear them applied to herself.

MORE HONORS HEAPED UPON WRIGHT FAMILY

Dayton, June 18.—The nation, state and city in which they live, today paid tribute to Wilbur and Orville Wright, aviators. In standing on the platform not far from their unpretentious little aeroplane factory, and almost within sight of a field where they first struggled with the problem of aerial navigation, General James Allen, chief signal officer of the army, assisted by Secretary of War Dickinson, for the purpose, presented to the Wright brothers the gold medals authorized by Congress. At the same time were given them a diamond studded medal bearing the official seal of Ohio and another from Dayton, their home city. The state medal was presented by Governor Harmon, of Ohio, and the local medal by Mayor Edward E. Burkhart, of Dayton.

Following the presentation there was a parade of floats depicting the development of travel in America from the Indian runner to the aeroplane.

General Allen's Address.

"The success of the Wright brothers has not been due to chance," said General Allen, "but to their persistence, daring and intelligence in scientifically working out the different parts that go to make up their machine and practically testing the same in flight. Orville and Wilbur Wright have by their genius and perseverence done honor to the United States. The United States in return has signally honored them by a joint resolution of its congress and the presentation of these medals, designed by the secretary of war in compliance with that resolution and with the co-operation of the secretary of the treasury struck at the United States mint at Philadelphia.

"Within the last few months Wilbur Wright has made demonstrations in the presence of the King of Spain, the King of Italy, the King of England and the ambassador at Rome has also flown as a passenger with Mr. Wright. These two distinguished gentlemen have, therefore, received well-earned recognition and honors both at home and abroad."

General Allen described the medals during his speech. They bear the fac-simile of the great seal of the United States, the date of the joint resolution of congress, providing for the medals and the words of the resolution:

"In recognition and appreciation of their ability, courage and success in navigating the air."

On the reverse side is a cherub bearing the torch of enlightment flying over the earth and the inscription, "Shall mount up with wings as eagles."
