

ECKHART DIES FROM MEYERS' PISTOL SHOT

Salem Policeman Slain and His Slayer Has Fled

Salem, Or., Oct. 2.—Patrolman Thomas M. Eckhart, who was shot early yesterday morning by George Meyers, as he was taking Meyers to jail, died shortly after 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the Salem hospital in an ante-mortem statement. Eckhart detailed the circumstances leading up to the shooting.

The cold-blooded and unprovoked killing of the officer has produced much bitter feeling, and there are some fears of mob violence if Meyers is captured. Reports were in circulation late last night that Meyers had been captured at Independence, but they proved to be unfounded.

Meyers is Desperate Man. Those who know Meyers state that he will never be taken alive if he gets an inkling of the death of his victim, and as Meyers is well known as a sportsman and a crack shot with a rifle or revolver, it is feared there will be more blood shed before he is captured.

Mayor Rodgers announces that the city of Salem will pay a reward of $50 for the capture of the assassin, and Chief of Police Gibson and Sheriff Minto have offered to add to this $25 each from their own pockets if Meyers is captured alive.

Fugitive Is Youngest Son. The fugitive is the fifth son of Joseph Meyers of Portland, who founded the largest mercantile business in Salem and who sold out a year or more ago, to his sons H. W. and M. L. Meyers, who are now conducting the business. During the past year the Meyers family has been much in the limelight, owing to the efforts of the sons to prevent their father marrying Mrs. Durette, and the theft of a box of securities, valued at $50,000, while the valuables were in transit between Salem and Portland.

Shot Down in Cold Blood. Eckhart, in his dying statement, said he was not on the street by accident, but was there to arrest Meyers.

LATEST PORTRAIT OF ROBERT E. PEARY.

Persons who have seen Commander Robert E. Peary since his return declare that he bears few traces of the long and trying months spent in the arctic region. A man of less vigorous physique would have succumbed long ago to the hardships endured on the polar hunt. Before departing on the late trip to the pole Commander Peary declared that it would be his last voyage to the north, as he was becoming too old to think of heading another expedition. Peary was born in Pennsylvania, May 6, 1856.

ers remarked: "Some one is in there looking in the window." As Eckhart turned from the window to face Meyers, the prisoner, with a curse, pulled a pistol from his sliker, and shot Eckhart, the bullet entering the abdomen. Eckhart fell to the ground, and Meyers, turning back, shot the officer again, the bullet taking effect in his knee.
