CONGRESSMAN HAWLEY TELLS HOW IT'S DONE

Representative W. C. Hawley, at the University assembly this morning, delivered to the students a very instructive and valuable lecture on "How a Committee of Congress Works." Mr. Hawley used the committee on agriculture, of which he is a member, as an example. His outline of the inside workings of the most important part of the machinery of the American government was very simple and very clear. At the close of the lecture he was loudly applauded by his audience, who realized that his lecture was perhaps the most valuable that has ever been delivered in Willard hall this year.

Mr. Hawley at first briefly outlined the general plan of the methods and division of Congress, the methods of apportionment for the house of representatives, the election of officers, the methods of the two parties, described the manner of seating in the house and quickly led up to the subject of committee bills. He said, it is wholly done by committees. A speech on a bill by a member is never done before an empty house and the stenographers. The committees are appointed by the speaker of the house who makes them after a personal investigation of the abilities and experience of the members, seldom by favoritism, according to Mr. Hawley. The reason for placing the bills in the hands of the committee is obvious. There were last year no less than 10,000 bills, which if read alone would occupy the whole 24 hours of each day during the whole session of congress. The duties of the committees are two-fold,—execution and promotion, that is, separating the important from the unimportant bills.

The most important work before Congress is the raising and the apportioning of the country's revenue, both of which involve some $2,000,000,000 dollars yearly, said the speaker. The stupendous task of handling this sum is divided into many committees. The money for the army department or the navy or the department of agriculture, or any department must go through these committees. Mr. Hawley's committee is that of agriculture, so he used it as an example for his explanation. This committee differs from most others in that there are no political sides taken.

The first thing done by this body when it meets is to summon the chiefs of the different bureaus under the department of agriculture, and one at a time secures a list of the appropriations desired by their department. These lists the committees will take up, item by item, striking out or changing as it seems best. After they have finished, their report is sent to Congress and is generally accepted, for if any others opposed it they would oppose the report of the others, explained by Mr. Hawley.

The chiefs of the bureaus must show how they used the previous year's appropriation. If it develops that the results that were promised when obtaining the money were not obtained, this appropriation is apt to be discontinued, or at least be reduced. Occasionally an item is brought up that money was illegally expended. Mr. Hawley said this occurred last year in one instance and the offending chief of the bureau was "placed on the carpet" and "given the third degree" in such a manner that the probabilities of a repetition of the offense are very slight. All the proceedings and the questions and answers put before the committee are kept by stenographers, and later published by the printer.

or and can be had by anyone who wishes a copy.
Representative Hawley at this time stated that the committee was very careful of all expenditures. He said: "The department of agriculture wastes less of the people's money than any other department, unless it is that of the postoffice, and it renders more service for the same amount of money expended than any department."
When the work of passing on each of the different items is finished, what is left on the bill is formally adopted by the committee and sent to congress, accompanied by a report or explanation in the form of a speech. Copies of these are sent to the printer and printed copies are available to anyone who wishes to know the proceedings of the committee. After the bill is read in the house, the explanatory speech is delivered and this is generally replied to by some member of the opposite party, or in the case of this department, by anyone who wishes to cut it down. After the reply is made the bill is open to the house for discussion. Each paragraph is read and held for discussion, when it may be amended or partially or wholly cut out. After all this is gone through the house generally resolves itself into a committee of the whole and the bill is adopted by "unanimous consent." It is now ready for the senate.

At the close of this explanatory address Mr. Hawley changed his subject to a short talk in defense of what is called "corruption" of congress and he expressed himself quite vigorously on this subject. He said:
"After the few years I have been here I do not know on the floor of the house a single man it would be safe to approach with a dishonest proposition." "The man who will perjure or even attempt any deception will not have a friend there and his influence among us will be absolutely nothing."
Vehemently he showed how much the matter of honesty in every way amounted to in this honored office. He also said that further than this, the more diligent a man was the greater his influence became, and the easy-going congressman had little room at Washington. The hard-working man was generally inclined to be considered the most honest. He said that in congress "not great wealth, but sterling character of American manhood and assiduous labor will gain attention from the other members of the house."
He closed by impressing upon the students the positive necessity for such a policy of every man who wishes to succeed in public life, regardless of the contrary opinions started by some yellow newspapers.

HAD TO GIVE UP HIS CHILD THROUGH HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS
Daniel Lough Runs Away With Baby After Court Had Given Possession to Mother

Daniel Lough, a recent arrival here from Warren county, Ill., was served with a writ of habeas corpus this afternoon, issued by Judge Harris, of the circuit court, compelling him to deliver his infant child, one year old and not yet named, to its mother. Mrs. Lough alleges in her petition for the writ of habeas corpus that her husband used her for divorce in Warren county, Ill., in September, 1909, and that she was allowed the temporary custody of the child by the court, but that Lough fled from Warren county toward the summit of the mountains, and is stopping at Eugene, where he has held the child in restraint.
Judge Harris issued a writ commanding Lough to produce the child in court forthwith.

MAREAN HURD THOUGHT TO BE WELL AND SAFE

Marean Hurd's folks are not greatly alarmed for the safety of the young man, who left Eugene a week ago Monday for the Cascade mountains. He left on horseback with plenty of provisions and it is thought that there is no danger of his freezing or starving to death. It is believed that he encountered a great deal of snow toward the summit of the mountains, and is stopping at some rancher's place until conditions are better.

Supervisor C. R. Seitz, of the Cascade reserve, accompanied by Ranger Mann, left here today for the Hill ranch, on the upper Willamette, to ascertain the whereabouts of young Hurd. Supervisor Seitz does not think the young man has perished, but to be on the safe side will make the trip.
Hurd started for Rossland, Crook county, and word came yesterday that he had not yet reached that point, hence the apprehension felt for his safety.
