Encouraged by its regarded as practical assurance of good prices for the coming crop, the growers in all parts of the Valley are cultivating their yards in a more thorough-going manner than for years past. The Oregon hop men this year are bent on making the crop as big and good as conditions will permit.

That the statistical position of hops in the world markets is strong is considered in all quarters, and the chances are that the 1910 crop will come onto a market more nearly than for many years past clear of old stock. That is what gives the farmers at this time all but assurance of satisfactory price all but assurance of
