MEDITATIONS

I stood, in the sweet, soft gloaming, alone by the pasture bars, and there, with a deep emotion, I gazed at the glowing stars, and my bosom was filled with yearning for better and higher things, and I wished that my soul might journey up there on its shining wings. To roam in the maze of planets! To follow the starry track! Then a bag of sand from an airship fell on me and broke my back. I stood on the frozen river, and thought of the prisoned stream, that journeyed along beneath me, shut out from the sunlight's gleam. "How much like my own existence," I mused, "is this river's flow! Shut out from the rays of sunshine, and doomed to the dark below! How much like this sullen river, concealed from Dame Nature's smiles—" Then I stepped in an unseen air-hole, and drowned in a dozen styles. Whenever I pause to ponder on problems that vex the soul, catastrophes always happen, and put me deep in a hole. And so I shall cease to question the streams and the heavens dumb; I'll kick up my heels and gambol, and take things just as they come.

THERE IS BUT ONE REAL ISSUE

The city of Eugene now owns a water and filtration system and electric power plant reasonably worth a million dollars. If owned by private corporations, these properties would probably be capitalized for more than that sum, and they will grow yearly more valuable with the growth of the city, if properly managed. It is therefore important that the keeping of these properties be entrusted to those who have been instrumental in accumulating them, and not placed in the hands of opponents of municipal ownership. That will be the issue in the coming city election, the ticket headed by Frank J. Berger for mayor being the one which the people should support if they are in favor of retaining the ownership of these utilities by the people. This is the one and only issue of importance that will come up for decision by the voters on April 3rd, and all personal questions and trivial matters should be brushed aside in order to secure a plain expression of the voters on the one question which vitally concerns the welfare of the community.

SENATORIAL QUALIFICATIONS

There is much sound common sense in Dr. Anna Howard Shaw's published views as to what she would do if elected senator. Dr. Shaw is president of the National Woman's Suffrage association.

and apparently possesses qualities of broad-minded judgment which entitle her to such a position.

"It seems to me that the great trouble with our senators is that they are too scared in the interests," says Dr. Shaw. "They fritter away their energies supporting dozens of unimportant measures instead of concentrating real care and thought on weighty legislation. If I were in the senate today, I would vote for reciprocity with Canada, popular election of senators, tariff regulation, all bills that I considered national in their scope, none that would benefit my constituents alone."

In short, if Dr. Shaw were a real senator, she would also be an ideal one. Although it is unquestionably easier to define a good senator than to be a good senator, there is no question but that if the senatorial candidates should run on Dr. Shaw's platform he would receive the hearty endorsement of the people.

The things Dr. Shaw stands for are the things the majority of people want. And the reason they don't get them is largely due to the fact that the average senator is scared of the interests and does not, as Dr. Shaw would do, consider questions as they relate to the national welfare rather than to selfish interests of some locality.

The Sacramento Union thus refers to the biennial farce of altering the game laws: "The hit-and-miss policy of dealing with the question of game protection should be stopped. Proper laws defining the open and closed season should be based upon a thorough and scientific understanding of the life of wild birds and animals which the hunter seeks. Habits of breeding and birth should be carefully studied and the young should be allowed full time to reach maturity. Recklessness should give way to expert knowledge."

Railroads estimate that the present colonist movement will add anywhere from 15,000 to 20,000 population to Oregon. This is only for the period from March 19 to April 19, when the low west-bound rates apply, according to the Portland Telegram. The 15,000 figure is regarded as extremely conservative, while some of the traffic men who have been studying conditions carefully are willing to gamble that the total accession will be nearer 25,000. These estimates are, of course, provisional and are based on the predictions of the officials of the Hill-Harriman and Canadian Pacific, or initial lines, and on indications gathered from advices received by the local representatives of other trans-continental lines.

For the first time in many years, the democrats of Maine expect their state to be an important one in the national election in 1912. These democrats did not set much store by the recognition of their state in 1896 when Arthur Sewell was nominated for vice-president on the ticket headed by Bryan for the first time. Also the democrats of Massachusetts and Connecticut expect to be more potent in the next national convention than they were for fifteen years past.

It looks now as if President Taft's action in sending an army to the Mexican frontier would end the revolution, but in a way not thought of when the movement of troops was begun. Mexicans of all factions, fearing American intervention, are apparently laying aside their differences in order to present an unbroken front against the United States.

Millis Admits Coos Bay Railroad Plan is Receiving "Serious Consideration"

Portland, Or., March 14.—New steamer service and a railway project for Coos Bay were business subjects that took J. C. Millis, superintendent of Harriman Steamship line between this port and Coos Bay, to San Francisco for a month. He returned yesterday.

Mr. Millis' conference with leading Harriman officials in San Francisco involved the placing, if necessary, of a steamship service between Coos Bay and San Francisco, and the early construction of a railroad into that place to connect it with the main line of the Southern Pacific between Portland and San Francisco. Mr. Millis seemed to avoid discussing the railroad project for Coos Bay, but admitted that the enterprise is receiving serious consideration.

Early Start Probable.
"We are not ready yet to make definite announcement concerning the time of commencing work on the road," said Mr. Millis.

"Is the project a certainty?" he was asked.
"Well, we hope that something will be done at an early date in that regard, but we are not ready to announce definite plans at present," he said.

The Harriman interests began the construction of a road from Drain toward Coos Bay, and probably would have had it completed long before this time had it not been for the money stringency of 1907, which forced the work of construction to come to an end. That the Southern Pacific Company is still looking forward to having the line built to connect its main line with Coos Bay was indicated by Mr. Millis yesterday. He also predicted a steady increase in the amount of traffic his company would handle between Coos Bay and Portland.

Beginning about April 1 Mr. Millis said the steamer Breakwater will take up a five-day schedule for the spring and summer season.
