ACQUITTED.

It was getting toward 9 o'clock when my attention was attracted to a pretty little girl who was tripping across Regent street. Just as she reached the curb she slipped upon a patch of ice and fell heavily. It took me about half a second to reach the little woman and pick her up. She was shaken by the fall, though not injured, and I had to support her for a moment.

I had tramped up and down my beat three or four times when a bareheaded cashboy ran out of one of the big shops and yelled at me: "Come quick! The manager has caught a shoplifter!"

"Ah, officer," said the manager, who was a mere business machine, "I am glad you have come. One of our clerks at the lace counter discovered that a valuable piece of lace had been stolen and gave the alarm. This woman hurried away from the counter. The lace was found in an outside pocket of her cloak. This is the piece on the desk here."

There was a sudden movement on the part of the woman. She snatched her handkerchief from her face, extended her right arm and finger, which shook with rage, and, turning her blazing eyes upon the business machine, she fairly screamed: "'Tis false! I am no thief!" She was the black eyed little girl that I had picked up scarcely half an hour before.

Then she told me her little story. She was an orphan and had been brought up by an old aunt in Yorkshire. About six months before this her aunt had died, and she came on to the city and turned her hand to lacemaking and had been able to support herself decently since then.

She said that she had stepped into the shop to make some small purchases and was arrested when walking away. She protested that she did not know how the lace came to be found in her pocket.

I explained the case to the sergeant at the station and got his permission for her to sit in a chair in the office instead of occupying a cell all night.

Somehow I couldn't get the sorrowful look of those black eyes out of my mind, and I couldn't sleep, and when daylight came time hung on a peg until court time came. I walked around thinking over the case, trying to arrive at some solution favorable to the girl.

Of course when we got to court Minnie—that was her name—was convicted in one, two, three order. She made no statement—just stood dazedlike—and the judge held her for trial in the court above.

As they led the girl away she was the picture of death. I gave her a nod of encouragement, but she returned it with a look that said just as plainly as words could have said, "My heart is broken."

I had questioned her closely as to the appearance of the people who had stood near her at the lace counter. She could remember none save one flashily dressed woman who had attracted her attention because of a remarkable mutilation of one of her ears, as if a piece had been cut out in a triangular form.

I persuaded the superintendent to grant me leave of absence for a couple of days and went to work. I overhauled the pictures at the office and gazed hard and earnestly at the features of every female "crook" in the "rogues' gallery," but I could not find the one I was after.

At last I fell to reading the remarks under the picture of a bold, handsome face and was knocked all into a cocked hat by the words, "Has a triangular piece cut out of the left ear."

I had a long talk with a detective friend of mine, and after awhile he was able to place the woman and told me where she most frequented.

All that day and nearly all the next I was on the lookout for that lady and was despairing when a big, handsome woman swept past me, actually brushing against me with her sealskin cloak.

I glanced up and fairly started, for one of her ears was mutilated just as the girl and the note in the office had described.

The woman swept on, and I followed. She entered the very shop where I had arrested Minnie and went up to the very counter where the lace was stolen and began examining the stock. And then, selecting a trifle, she paid for it and turned to go.

I was in a quandary. But I was determined to make an effort and run the risk of making a serious mistake. Stepping up to her I touched her shoulder and whispered: "Come with me. I want you a moment," at the same time looking straight into her eyes.

Every drop of blood left the woman's face. She fairly trembled for an instant, and then she looked back defiantly and went with me.

We had moved but a step or two in the direction of the bookkeeper's den, where the girl had been searched three days before, when something struck my foot. I stooped and picked up a bundle of lace. The woman had dropped it. I was right. I had found my thief.

Seeing that she was caught, the shoplifter owned up that she had stolen the piece of lace. When accused of the other theft for which I wanted her, she confessed to that too.

My, but wasn't that a grateful little woman! She just ran and placed her arms around my neck and kissed me. I was kind of taken back, for, although I rather enjoy kissing, I don't like too many witnesses.

I married her two weeks afterward, and the business machine gave her a $250 outfit and was glad to get out of the awkward fix at that price.—London News.

An Incompetent Witness.

At this point the big and fierce looking justice of the peace took a hand in the examination as he glowered at the main witness:

"Had you ever saw this prisoner before you seen him stealing them harness?"

"Not that I knows on."

"Do you identify them there harnesses as the one he took from your barn?"

"Them's my harness."

"Do you stand up here on your solemn oath and say they hain't no other setter harness like them in the country?"

"I got my marks on them harness and could tell 'em if they was in Novey Scoshey."

"Would you have knowed them if you wasn't here when the constable brung them into the presence of the court?"

"I tell you I would have knowed 'em anywhere."

"You what?"

"I would have knowed 'em anywhere."

"Gentlemen of the jury," roared the justice, "I want to call your attention to this here witness' grammar. Instead of saying 'he would have known,' he says 'he would have knowed.' You notice he can't talk correct no more than nothin. I won't have no man convicted in this here court on testimony what hain't correct. The prisoner at the bar is acquitted on the conditions of leavin other folks' harnesses and likewise also other chattels alone."—Detroit Free Press.

RAINED BLACK BUGS.

A Section of Klickitat County Covered With Insects.

The Dalles T-M says: John Splawn, who resides in the Hog-heaven country, in Klickitat county, was in the city yesterday and reported a peculiar shower of black bugs just beyond the Curtis place.

Before reaching the vicinity where the insects were falling he noticed the atmosphere ahead was filled with what appeared to be a dark fog, and that the ground was uncommonly black. On proceeding a little further he observed the ground was covered with myriads of creeping insects about the size of ordinary grains of powder, and in places they were piled up to the depth of two inches. He could scrape them up by the handful, and they appeared to be lively little fellows resembling a louse in form, though they were jet black in color.

What the little insects are or where they came from is a mystery. Such a shower was never before heard of in this vicinity, though it does sometimes rain frogs and horned toads, but black lice, as Mr Splawn calls them are unusual visitors. It might be well for some of our scientists to visit the locality where they were discovered, and exert their bugological wits to determine what they are.

That plaintiff have judgment against defendant for costs and disbursements of suit and for such other relief as is equitable.

This summons is published by order of the Hon. J. C. Fullerton, Judge of the above Court, made on the 12th day of January, 1897.

A. C. Woodcock,
Attorney for Plaintiff.

Something to Depend Upon.

Mr James Jones of the drug firm of Jones & Son, Cowden, Ill., in speaking of Dr King's New Discovery, says that last winter his wife was attacked with la grippe, and her case grew so serious that physicians at Cowden and Pana could do nothing for her. It seemed to develop into hasty consumption. Having Dr King's New Discovery in store, and selling lots of it, he took a bottle home, and to the surprise of all she began to get better from first dose, and half a dozen dollar bottles cured her sound and well. Dr King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds is guaranteed to do this good work. Try it. Free trial bottles free at Henderson & Linn's Drug store.

It is rumored over here that the game warden has a lot of our citizens names on his death roll. We can't imagine what this can be for. People over here in the Coast mountains live on potatoes, hog and hominy, with an occasional fat beef for soup. The game warden or McKinley, or anybody else don't need to think that we would ever look at a deer, let alone eat one. A few years ago a county judge did cut off the head of a deer out of season, a deputy sheriff hunted some and a prosecuting attorney went away full of law and venison from these parts. The game warden must be thinking of those fellows.

Eczema, sores and skin diseases yield quickly when it is used.

I was enabled to attend to my work, and the second bottle effected a cure." For sale at 25 and 50 cents per bottle by Osburn & Delano.
